Day by Day.

SUNDAY, November 24. 2 Timothy ii.

IN the old Greek race, the bearer of the lighted torch handed it to the next, and he to the next, and it was carried forward with swift and flying feet; so the Apostle, having carried the Gospel light to his furthest, hands it to the beloved Timothy, bidding him in turn communicate it to faithful men, who in their turn shall pass it on to those whom they have taught. Perhaps this chapter may be best gathered up in its five characteristic words.

A Soldier (3-5). Our commander-in-chief gave orders recently that no officers should transport about South Africa, whilst on the march, any superfluous luggage, or heavy articles such as a harmonium or piano. Is not this exactly the Apostle's thought? He says, Don't entangle yourselves too deeply in the affairs of this life. Be light-armed.

The Husbandman (6). We have every reason to partake first of the blessed fruitage of our toils, in the love and faith of our converts; but if we are to win converts for God, we must labour for them. Souls are not won save by toils and tears. Notice in this paragraph the interesting and striking alteration of the R.V.—"Remember Jesus Christ, risen from the dead." Oh, that we might ever live in mind of our risen Lord! Would not his figure stand between us and temptation? Let us be willing to suffer and die with Him. He is quick to respond to every change in us, but will never prove unfaithful to his charge.

A Workman (15). Our one aim should be to please God, like the old sculptor, who was so careful in executing a piece of carved work which no one would be able to see, owing to its high position in the chancel roof, but who said, "But God will see it."

Vessels (20). It matters little on what shelf we stand, whether among golden or earthern vessels, so long as we are clean. Cleanliness is more than cleverness in the Master's eyes.

The Lord's Bond-Servant (24). Many are being snared by Satan; it is for us to instruct them and catch them, for obedience to the will of God, by our patience, love, and instruction in the Gospel. (See R.V.)

MONDAY, November 25. 2 Timothy iii.

What contrasts are presented in this chapter! Against the background, as dark as a Rembrandt might paint it, in the earlier verses (1-9) the Apostle delineates the holy character of the young Timothy (10-17).

What a terrible category of crime is here. But, indeed, there is no form of sin too dark and mean for us to stoop to when once we are content with holding a form of godliness, whilst we deny its power. Better deny the form, and be outwardly ungodly, than keep up a mere external decorum of reputation from which the heart and essence have long since evaporated. There is more hope of the openly dissolute and profane than of the hypocrite. Notice how this type of character may be allied to the manners of the drawing-room and captivate the butterflies of society (7). Notice also that such men are great obstacles to the progress of the truth.

In turning to Timothy's own character and career, how the Apostle's heart glows and burns in his words. The disciple had closely followed in the steps of his own example. He had stood beside him amid the heavy persecutions of far-away days of labour. And now his teacher, leader, and friend, conscious that he will soon be removed from his side, labours to assure him of the truth of Scripture. In many a terrible hour he had found the sacred writings full of comfort and inspiration. They had been his pharmacopœia, full of heavenly medicine; his armoury, replete with weapons of heavenly temper; his vade mecum, a traveller's guide, abounding with directions for heavenly pilgrims. Whether we read, "All Scripture is inspired by God, and is," &c., or "Every Scripture, inspired by God, is profitable," it is certain that inspiration is an inherent quality of the Book.

TUESDAY, November 26. 2 Timothy iv.

The last charge of one of the greatest of men or missionaries: "I charge thee!" To him the time seemed all too short for the work that had to be done. The Lord was at hand; the opportunities of winning that old Roman world were becoming few; the eager interest with which the men of the time would listen to a new thing would soon be succeeded by apathy and dislike. The tide was at its full, and inclined to turn towards its ebb. His own ministry was about to terminate. All these considerations pressed the urgency of his appeals to Timothy to redouble his pace.

With what pathetic words, the Apostle refers to his approaching decease. He was a sacrifice on the altar, and being offered; or a passenger on board the good ship waiting to drop down seaward with the tide; or a veteran who had fought valiantly and successfully—keeping the faith, as in the old Roman story the heroes kept the bridge.

> Twilight and evening star,
> And one clear call for me;
> And may there be no moaning on the bar,
> When I put out to sea.

He was lonely—"only Luke is with me." He needed to be ministered to—take Mark. He shivered in the prison damp—"the clothes that I left in Troas." He wanted the manuscripts of his Bible, and perhaps of his own Epistles. He had made his first appearance before Nero, and had to appear a second time ere he could receive his sentence. But the Lord was with him; and he could say with the blessed Master, "He that sent me is with me; the Father hath not left me alone, for I do always those things that please Him."

WEDNESDAY, November 27. Titus i.

This Epistle was written after Paul was liberated from Rome on his first charge, and before he was taken to answer on the second. See how hope burns in his heart with unquenchable fire, and always the proud sense of being entrusted with the Gospel. Always, too, the thought of God as his Saviour. This latter is a favourite phrase in each of these pastoral Epistles, and especially in this.

He was very careful of the outward organization of the churches which he had founded. He knew the absolute importance of godly leaders and teachers; men who, with all their knowledge of God, never forgot those classes of people whom Christ never forgot—"the last," "the lost," and "the least." The last in privilege and opportunity, the lost to faith and righteousness, the least of his brethren, poor, homeless, outcast and friendless. What a boundless optimism was Paul's. To him the proof of what Jesus Christ was, lay in what He could do. He knew that his Master could take the chips that fell on the floor of other people's workshops and make saints of them; and he desired that He should have as his ministers and coworkers men who would not hinder, but help Him, in his glorious work of salvation (8-9).

There were plenty of counterfeits in those days, as always (10). But amid them all, with their babbling voices and low-living passions, there were pure and holy souls, who bore themselves erect and followed the Christ. Oh, for the cleansed conscience and mind, which sheds the light of heavenly purity on all the darkness around!

THURSDAY, November 28. Titus ii.

Here is a good rule. Measure the quality of the teaching of your ministers by the healthy life which it produces; sound (2) means healthy. Christianity, unlike the spirit of modern life, sets great store on the hoary head, when it is found in the way of righteousness. Aged men and women, get you up into the mountains, and lift up your hands in prayer for the Joshuas that are battling in the plain. The minister does more by practice than precept. "Show thyself an example." It was as Jesus was praying in a certain place, that his disciples said, "Lord, teach us to pray."

Some of the sweetest things in the Epistles were addressed to the slaves of the rich patrician families, who found solace amid their hard lot in the gatherings of the Christian Church. Here is one of the little Bibles of the Bible—the essence of the Bible in a single text—addressed to the household servants, who might by their lives adorn the Gospel of God our Saviour. Think of it! A slave's life might be so lived, that it would be to the blessed Gospel what jewels are to the neck of beauty. Your life and mine ought to be like this—always and everywhere say to yourself, "Is this word or act calculated to commend my Saviour, adorning his blessed truth, and commending it to men?" The grace of God has appeared—the glory of God is to appear. It comes to us as a gentle instructress or school teacher, never irritated, never short-tempered, never impatient, but teaching us by line on line, precept on precept. We must deny . . . we must live . . . we must look up and on. We must be sober in ourselves, righteous towards men, godly towards God. Jesus died to redeem, not only from hell, but from the power of sin.

FRIDAY, November 29. Titus iii.

Throughout this brief Epistle, the Apostle insists on good works (ii. 7, 14; iii. 1, 8, 14). The word rendered good might be translated beautiful. We must not work for salvation, but being saved we must be ready to every good work, careful to maintain good works, learned to maintain good works for necessary uses. In this last phrase, the Apostle apparently refers to the trades and callings by which his converts were to earn their daily bread.

What singular beauty there is in his allusion to the appearance of the kindness and love of God our Saviour! These appeared in the person of Jesus, whose human nature alternately veiled and revealed them. He speaks of the laver of regeneration (5 marg.), because the new nature, which we receive at the sacred moment of the new birth, is clean, and cleanses the entire life, from within and outwards. It is wrought in us by the Holy Spirit whom God pours on men through Jesus Christ our Saviour. My reader, how is it with thee? Is this thine experience? Wilt thou not claim that He should be shed on thee also richly? Why art thou content with anything short of God's very best? Thou art justified, and an heir; claim, then, the portion of the firstborn.

It is well to shun controversy and disputations. Small benefit results from such methods of advancing the truth. Let us rather endeavour to possess and cultivate the grace and beauty, the righteousness and truthfulness of holy living; then our own views of truth are likely to become clear and sound, and the consistency of our behaviour will have the largest possible effect on gainsayers. It is better to live a holy life than be a successful disputant. The best orthodoxy is a consistent life.

SATURDAY, November 30. Philemon.

Onesimus had been a runaway slave. He had known the Apostle when he was a guest at his master's house; and when he had fled to Rome, herding in some low den of infamy, and, perhaps, suffering the results of want and disease, he was recognised by the associates of the Apostle, as they were engaged on some holy ministry, and brought to him. He had been converted through the ministry of the hired room, where Paul was eking out his time. "Whom I have begotten in my bonds." The converted slave had become very dear and useful to his benefactor (12, 13).

The Apostle now sends him back to his friend and former owner, Philemon, "as a brother beloved, and pleads with him to receive him again into his household, no longer as a servant, but as more than a servant. In saying this, how certainly he was scattering seed-germs which, as they were fructified by the grace of God, would assuredly split to pieces the strong walls of slavery and social tyranny, parting man from man.

How touching his pleading! He thanks God for Philemon, commends him for his love and faith, reminds him of the refreshment and comfort he had ministered, recapitulates the claims of his own age, imprisonment, and spiritual helpfulness (9, 10, 19). He even undertakes to make good all losses that Onesimus had entailed (18). Thus our interceding High Priest, says of us also—"Put that to my account."

A Terrible Disaster.

NO doubt many of you have read in the newspapers, or have heard from your parents, of the sad event which occurred at Caister, near Yarmouth, last week. The lifeboat, which has done such splendid service for many years, was being launched to go to a vessel in distress; but owing to the fierceness of the storm it was capsized, and nine of the lifeboat-men were drowned. It is one of those sad stories from which we may learn many lessons.

1. These lifeboat men were unsuccessful (although this was not their fault), but no one would be so foolish as to say, therefore, "Lifeboats are a failure; I do not believe in them." Yet this is what some people are foolish enough to say about Christianity when they see some who profess to love Jesus failing to walk the Christian life aright. If any of you have had a bad penny given you in change, you do not say that you will "never believe in pennies any more!"

2. They were generous. Whenever a storm arose they did not think of themselves, but tried to save those in danger. To live for others is the highest aim of life, for "even Christ pleased not Himself." Shall we not, therefore, follow this example, although sometimes it may mean self-denial and great inconvenience?

3. They were ready. In calm weather they pursued other callings as fishermen, boatmen, &c.; but above all they were lifeboat-men, and never forgot it. They were not always required, but they were always ready, so that they were willing to leave everything else, and

> Where duty called, or danger,
> Were never wanting there.

It is not enough to be generous, kind-hearted, and well-disposed if we are not ready to put these good qualities into practice at a moment's notice when required.

4. They were orderly. They knew exactly where to find everything that would be required for their perilous voyages. If they had not done so, and had to occupy time in looking for an oar, a rope, or an anchor, which was not in its proper place, they might have arrived sometimes too late at the scene of a wreck. This is a lesson worth learning. Strive to be tidy and orderly, and put your things where you will know where to find them. I am always sorry to see girls having to hunt for their gloves and hat-pins, or boys for their caps or books, when it is time to start for school.

5. They were persevering. It took three hours in the terrible gale last week before they were finally able to launch the lifeboat from the beach, owing to the force of the waves. It seemed almost a hopeless task, but they encouraged each other with their motto, "Caister lifeboat-men never turn back." Perhaps neither you nor I will ever have to face such terrible difficulties as they met; but, whatever they are, let us always remember the splendid motto of the Caister men.

6. They were renowned. It is fifty-six years ago since this lifeboat station was established, and during that time the men belonging to it have rescued more than 1,200 lives. What a wonderful record! But perhaps the saddest thing of all is that two who had assisted in saving nearly all these 1,200 were among the nine who have now lost their lives. Of course, as years have passed, some members have died, and younger ones have taken their places, but the new members have shared the glory of the older ones. It is a grand thing to belong to a great and noble cause. Boys and girls make, as well as share, the credit of their schools. The moral tone of a school is "good" or "bad," according to the pupils that are in it. If you belong to one with a good name, be sure you do your best to live up to it; and if your school has a bad name, use all the influence you possibly can to alter it.

All honour to those who, in the face of hardship and difficulty, persevere and win the day, and "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

There is one more lesson for us to learn, for surely this incident reminds us of how our Saviour, Jesus Christ, faced the raging billows of sin, and came to save those who were struggling in its breakers. But He was not like the noble lifeboat-men who perished without accomplishing their purpose. He died, but "through death He overcame."

If you had been on the wreck you would not have been so foolish as to reject the offer of safety if the lifeboat had reached it, and was able to carry you ashore. But it is worse than foolish, it is wicked, to reject the offer of salvation which Christ brings to you and me. "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us"; "When we were yet without strength, Christ died for the ungodly." While we admire heroic deeds and noble men, let us bravely rank ourselves upon the side of our Lord and Master, and "never turn back."

"Duty."

Our School Watchword.

There is a word of letters four,
A word of wondrous beauty;
'Tis one the earnest-hearted love—
Our little watchword, "Duty."

To do which is a splendid thing,
And calls for purpose stable;
We fail, if on ourselves we lean,
But God can make us "able."

We owe it to ourselves, and Him;
To those we love so dearly:
That we should do our very best
In things that hard are really.

'Tis hard, we know, when Nature smiles,
And birds their songs are singing,
To go indoors and set to work
Because the school-bell's ringing.

Yet Duty, then, we each must do
Like heroes of a nation,
And nobly try to buckle-to,
Despite our inclination.

If "prep," if "gym," whate'er the call,
No matter—we must do it
As Christian Knights, with purpose high
To battle bravely through it.

And when at length the term is o'er,
And home delights enfold us,
We will not let the subtle charm
Of ease too tightly hold us.

But we will rise, should duty call,
As men in service holy;
And do with willing hand and heart
The task, however lowly.

For all true work of any kind
Is discipline, intended
To fit us for a higher sphere
When earthly life is ended.

Personal.

 I should like to call the attention of my elder "Searchers" to the article on Friendship which appears on page 11. In fact, I think they would find weekly interest and profit in this series of "Practical Papers."

"Scriptures for India."—Next week I shall have something to say about the great scheme described on page 13. Meantime, ask your parents to explain it to you.

I am pleased to have received so many kind letters acknowledging receipt of prizes and certificates, and to know that these rewards have given so much pleasure and satisfaction to my "nephews and nieces." There are so many, it would be impossible for me to answer all of them personally.

Ethel Eastbury, Joyce Downie, Irene Butlin.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers," and hope you will enjoy the study.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, November 24.

Thanksgiving (Isaiah xxv. 1-8).

THIS song of praise was composed by Isaiah to be sung when the proud city of Babylon, which for so many years had menaced the liberty of the Hebrew people, should be overthrown. He is so certain that it will ultimately come to desolation, and that the world shall be relieved of the awful incubus of its tyranny that he prepares the song which was presently to break out. As easily as the torrid heat of the meridian sun is reduced by the interposition of the shadow of a cloud, so should the pride and boast of the terrible ones be brought low. Isaiah goes on to anticipate the time when Mount Zion should be the centre of the religious life of the world, and all mankind should eat of the feast prepared by Jehovah. In saying this does he not anticipate the words of our Lord, who spoke of the great feast which should be prepared for Jew and Gentile, and to which a broadcast invitation has been issued? (Compare Matt. xxii. 2-14 and Rev. xix. 7-9).

Turning from the immediate subject, we may take this psalm of praise to our hearts and lips with a wider significance. Just now great cities of evil oppose the Kingdom of God. Babylon resists the New Jerusalem. The drink curse is a defenced city; the opium traffic another; the systems of licensed immorality another; but the purpose of God must stand, that these should become ruinous heaps, that the thraldom which they have imposed on myriads of men should come to an end; that where there has been desolation and heartbreak, there should be songs of rejoicing.

No man will ever be able to take the credit of the destruction of these systems of evil to himself. That work shall be ascribed to God Himself, "Thou hast done wonderful things."

Are you poor? Make God your stronghold. Are you needy and in distress? Make Him your hiding-place. Does the storm beat on you? Flee to Him for refuge. Are you scorched by the heat of temptation? Stand beneath his shadow. He that sent you is with you; the Father will not leave you alone. Your need is your best argument; your helplessness your all-sufficient plea; for you, too, there shall be song and feasting.

The full significance of this song will be realized only in heaven, when we sit down at the marriage supper of the Lamb. All the Babylons which have menaced the well-being of mankind will have been destroyed then. The veil of unbelief and uncertainty which now lies so thickly over the face of the world, will have been torn from the top to the bottom. Death will have been swallowed up in life. Tears will have been wiped away, and our reproach will be over. What abounding joy will be our portion then. Let the anticipation of it excite our thanks.

Praise is our highest exercise. In prayer we approach God for more or less selfish reasons; in praise we adore Him for what He is in Himself. Nothing is better than to begin the morning with a song of praise. However tired and weary you may be, see to it that the morning hour of devotion begins with the key-note of thanksgiving and adoration. It is marvellous how this quickens the pulses of the soul, and reacts upon every moment that follows. "Awake, psaltery and harp," said the Psalmist, "I myself will awake early."

C.E. NOTES.

Rev. James Mursell, member of the National Council, has been elected president of the North-East London Union, and is arranging to meet the officers of all the connected societies during his year of office.

Reports at the tenth annual convention of the Queensland Union showed a statistical increase of twenty-one societies and 773 members, making a total of 156 societies, with 5,791 members. During the year twenty-six societies raised a total of £106 for missionary purposes.

An interesting letter from Rev. David Sutherland, M.A., the Endeavourers' representative at Sua-Bue, Southern China, was read at the annual missionary rally of English Presbyterian Endeavourers recently held at Liverpool. The most striking paragraph told of one native Christian who had so "endeavoured" since his admission to the church, three years ago, that he was now bringing no fewer than seventy men with him to church every Sunday from a distance of over eight miles.

The Call of Moses (Ex. iii. 1-12).

Golden Text: Ex. iii. 12.

Introductory.

MOSES lived for forty years in the palace of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, as the son of the King's daughter, knowing all the while that he was one of the Israelites, and never forgetting his own mother's early teaching. His blood boiled when he said how his brethren were oppressed, and one day he killed an Egyptian who was beating one of the Israelites. This was not, in those days, considered a crime, for a brother was bound to avenge the blood of a brother according to the law of the nomadic tribes; but this man was Pharaoh's servant, and when Moses found that his deed was known he was obliged to flee to save his life. Now he is an exile in the wilderness of Midian, and forty years of quiet life there was his second preparation for his great life work. He was near enough to have intercourse with his own people, and appears to have known his brother Aaron well (Ex. iv. 27, 28).

Pharaoh and his Daughter (ii. 23).

This Pharaoh was Rameses II. In the year 1881 the mummies of these royal personages were discovered to be in a hidden tomb among the rocks of Deir-el-Bahari. Forty mummies of kings, queens, princesses, and priests were there, and in 1886 Rameses II. and his daughter were unswathed, and their features photographed!

Horeb (1).

The Red Sea ends with two gulfs, between which is the peninsula, in the south part of which are situated a group of granite mountains. The northern end is termed Horeb, the southern Sinai. The ridge is about three miles in length, and water is abundant, causing the great extent of valley below to be very fruitful. (Summarize the many events in Jewish history that happened here.)

The Burning Bush (2-4).

A thorn bush, common to those parts, a species of acacia. A bright flame rose up in the midst of this bush and yet it was not burned. Moses came near to see it, and then God spake. It was, as far as we know, more than 200 years since God had spoken to his people. "God is light" (1 John i. 5, John viii. 12), "God a consuming fire" (Heb. xii. 29), his presence was often thus represented. The lowly bush was a type of Israel, the fire meant their trials, which would not destroy them because God was in their midst. The angel or messenger of Jehovah. "Jehovah Jesus" (Ps. civ. 4; Mal. iii. 1; Heb. i. 1-3). The monastery of Sinai now stands on the traditional site of the burning bush. In verse four are two names for God—Jehovah, the great self-existing Being; Elohim, the Almighty.

The Message (5-12).

First a call to Reverence, God is a Holy God, where He manifests Himself is holy ground. Putting off the shoes was a confession of personal defilement and conscious unworthiness. Note, the kindness of God, He calls Himself "the God of thy father," so that Moses should not be frightened. Our Saviour quotes this text (Matt. xxii. 31, 32), to prove the truth of the resurrection. Jehovah says, "I am," (6), "I have seen" (7), "I know" (7), "I am come down to deliver" (8), "I will send thee" (10), "I will be be with thee" (12)—revealing Himself to be a God of love and power, sympathy and strength. Refer to Gen. xv. 13, and point out how God's promises are always fulfilled. Consider the great work Moses was called to do; he who knew Pharaoh and the Egyptians so well, knew the difficulties.

"Who am I?" (11).

How changed was Moses since he tried to deliver in his own strength. Self-confidence all gone, so humble (Num. xii. 3). He never speaks of his own greatness in all the history of his work; but the last three verses of Deuteronomy, added by another hand, reveal it (chap. xxxiv. 10, 11, 12). Forty years of quiet life had fitted Moses for his future. All to whom God has given a great work have needed preparation. Ex.: Elijah, John the Baptist, Paul, Luther, John Knox.

Lessons.

God calls each of his children to some work for Him. Have I heard and answered that call? The golden text is what He says to each who obeys his call. God calls men when they are faithful in humble, daily work. If we would be used by God, we must bear the training. Humility is a virtue, but we must not make excuses. (Illustrate these points.)

Oxford Letter.

OXFORD Gleaners rejoice that their own missionary has been appointed to succeed Bishop Taylor Smith as the Head of the Diocese of Sierra Leone. Mr. Elwyn was greatly beloved by the people of St. Peter-le-Bailey, whom he served as curate for nearly two years. Many prayers will follow him as he goes to meet his increased responsibilities.

The addresses given by the Bishop of Oxford on the occasion of the Consecration of the Cemeteries were as stimulating and thoughtful as one has come to expect from him on great occasions. His subjects were: The union of the soul and body; the severance of soul and body; and the reunion of soul and body. The Mayor, Corporation, and many citizens were present.

A Conference of the Berks, Bucks, and Oxon Association of Baptist Churches was held at the New Road Baptist Chapel on Tuesday. The proceedings commenced with a devotional meeting in the morning, followed by the Holy Communion at 12.15. Meetings were held in the afternoon. Among the subjects discussed were: "Is the Church True to Her Description, 'The Salt of the Earth?'" "Our Message as Christians," and "Our Message as Baptists." The chief speakers were Revs. A. Bax, of Reading; J. Cave, of Wokingham; and A. Edwards, of Haddenham. It was urged that the Church was bowed down with a sense of defeat. It is well to look at facts, but we should look at all the facts. There are many glorious receptions, and in many a church and mission hall, and in many a broad place throughout the land, God's hand is being winged with power to many hearts. Yet it is true that many a church needs to be resalted.

The local branch of the Church Pastoral Aid Society held its annual meeting in Hannington Hall on Monday evening, Rev. Professor Margoliouth presiding. We rejoice to find that already, by the enthusiasm of the new secretary, Rev. P. G. Filleul, fresh interest has been created in this the oldest home mission society of the Church of England. The chairman's address was full of interest. He sketched the growth of the Society during some sixty-five years, stating that 700 parishes were now receiving assistance. He pleaded the wants both of men and money. Referring to his recent visit to Persia and Asiatic Turkey, he said he was struck with the amount of English money which was sent out there for religious purposes. He did not wish to stop generosity, as it appealed to the native mind, and was a factor in the spread of the Gospel, but he urged that such societies as the C.P.A. had a stronger claim.

Personalia.

Many readers will hear with regret that Mr. W. Monro Collings was recently obliged to relinquish his evangelistic engagements for the present through an acute attack of muscular rheumatism. Later reports, however, speak of improvement, and it is hoped that Mr. Collings will soon be able to resume his labours.

Mr. F. N. Charrington writes to us:—"Many who knew the worth of the late Mr. Joseph Clarke have expressed a wish to help his widow. In consequence of Mr. Clarke suffering from heart trouble he was unable to insure his life; and the widow is left unprovided for. We have therefore opened a fund for her, and shall be grateful for any contribution."

Evangelical Lay Preachers' Association (Islington District).—The committee invite lay preachers residing in North London to become members. Additional workers are greatly needed to cope with the increased demand for speakers. The work of the Association is heartily endorsed by the local ministers, several of whom are vice-presidents. Address, the Hon. Secretary, 99, Balfour Road, Highbury, N.

Million New Pledges Crusade.

Rev. Dr. HENRY'S CAMPAIGN.

THE Manchester campaign of Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and the Fisk Jubilee Singers made a deep impression, and aroused much enthusiasm. Of the concluding meeting in the Free Trade Hall, Mr. Robert Lewis writes:—"It was remarkable for the numbers attending, the magnificent address of Dr. Henry, and the result in pledges. I have been present at many great demonstrations, and consider that this one stands in the front rank. The reception given to Dr. Henry shows how well he has gripped the audiences, and the demonstration at the conclusion showed how deeply people's hearts had been stirred. Strong men wept as his peroration proceeded, and the thrill that ran through the whole audience will not be forgotten by any of us. I deeply regret that he was not with us for a week or ten days, as, just when he had got hold of the public mind, the mission ends. The pledges number 1,438."

THE WOLVERHAMPTON MEETINGS.

Proceeding to Wolverhampton, Dr. Henry and the singers commenced their mission with a meeting in Mount Zion Church, on November 14, when Mr. T. G. Baker presided over a very large attendance. In the course of a powerful address Dr. Henry said that the crusade is intended to strengthen and stimulate the convictions of temperance people, and to increase the temperance constituency in the country. The drink evil continues to live from generation to generation because of the recruits it receives from the ranks of the children, and the duty of the temperance party is to stop that recruiting by instilling into the minds of the young the principles of total abstinence.

An afternoon meeting was also held on the following day in the same church, Alderman Price Lewis presiding. Dr. Henry, speaking on the influence of the liquor traffic on religious and social life, contended that it must be judged by its effect there, and it has an evil effect always.

BIRMINGHAM'S ENTHUSIASM.

The Birmingham demonstrations, which followed, were also successful. On last Lord's Day large audiences came together, both afternoon and evening. At the latter gathering, Mr. E. Smith, J.P., presided, and Dr. Henry delivered an impassioned address upon the evils of intemperance. He described the power of the drink traffic as "the greatest scandal of the modern world," and proceeded to make a personal appeal to every man and woman present who was trifling with the great iniquity. He spoke of the ravages, the evils, and the woe that are caused by strong drink, and expressed regret and astonishment that men and women fail to learn by the bitter experience of past generations not to trifle and tamper with that "beverage of hell." On Monday two capital meetings were held. In the afternoon Dr. Henry gave a powerful address to ministers, in which he pointed out that the church is the agency by which the liquor traffic should be, and can be, effectively combated. "As soon as all pulpits are filled by ministers whose voices go forth with an unmistakable declaration against the evil, the churches will take up the question with vigour." Dr. Henry was cordially greeted by the ministers. In the evening he addressed a large meeting in the Central Hall, when many pledges were taken.

A DAY OF PRAYER.

On Monday last a meeting for prayer and counsel was held in the Library at the Memorial Hall, E.C., commencing at 11 a.m. and lasting until 9 p.m., a fresh speaker being introduced each hour. At the outset Rev. F. B. Meyer, speaking from the chair, made a brief but telling appeal, calling for intercession on behalf of the efforts that are to be put forth by ministers and others on Temperance Sunday, November 24. He also besought prayer for Dr. Henry's campaign, that it may be made the beginning of a great movement for the overthrow of the drink traffic. Rev. J. Landel Jones followed with an incisive address, in which he advocated the formation of groups of three or four church members to meet for prayer on behalf of the movement. Among other speakers announced were Revs. W. Darlow Serjeant, J. W. Ewing, and J. Scott Lidgett.

MINISTERS AND THE DRINK TRAFFIC.

The Liverpool Committee have issued a forcible declaration on the subject of the responsibility of Christians. It reads:

"We believe the time has fully come when followers of the Lord Jesus Christ should repudiate all complicity with the drinking customs of our country, and all responsibility for the evils entailed upon Church and State by the legalized traffic in strong drink.

"We solemnly declare our conviction that Christian men and women ought not to lend the influence of their own sober and godly lives to the perpetuation of a system which is to-day the worst enemy of the Cross of Christ.

"And we, therefore, being Free Church ministers in Liverpool and district, and ourselves total abstainers from all intoxicating liquors as beverages, earnestly appeal to the men and women of our churches to abandon their use, to sign the pledge, to make a sacrifice, if sacrifice be involved, and by practice, example, and effort, contribute to the overthrow of this gigantic evil, and the extension of the kingdom of God."

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Birmingham, 21, 3 p.m., Soho Hill Chapel, chairman, the Mayor of Smethwick; 8 p.m., Friends' Institute, Moseley Road, chairman, Mr. W. Priestman; 22, 8 p.m., Town Hall, chairman, the Lord Mayor of Birmingham; 23-26, Bristol (all meetings in Colston Hall, at 3 and 7.30, except November 26, when there is no afternoon gathering); 27, Cardiff (Park Hall); 28, Portsmouth (Town Hall); 30, December 1 and 2, Brighton (the Dome); 3, Croydon; 4, Beckenham; 5, 6, Hull; 7-9, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 10, 11, Sunderland; 12, Darlington; 13, Sheffield.

Mr. Meyer and Christ Church.

Letter to his People.

MY DEAR PEOPLE,—I was deeply touched by the answers, made in various ways, to the announcement of the approaching resignation of my pastorate among you. As long as I live I shall prize those two memorials, the one with upwards of nine hundred signatures from the church and congregation, the other with upwards of eleven hundred signatures from the neighbourhood, got up by my brothers of the P.S.A.

I want to assure you again that my one reason for proposing to resign the pastorate is my desire to make the most of my life for the service of Christ, in endeavouring to quicken the life of the Church, and to bring what help and encouragement I can to my brother ministers. Almost every other consideration of comfort and choice would combine to keep me where I am.

After repeated conferences with the officers, always in the kindest spirit, it has become clear that five or six months' absence during the winter months (which alone would be compatible with the carrying out of my life purpose), would be inconsistent with the welfare of the church, and of course, I must do nothing to imperil that. There is no alternative, therefore, than to act on my first letter; and I confess that this too may be most consistent with considerations of health, which might break down under a prolonged double strain.

At the same time, on the earnest solicitation of the officers, I am glad to leave the exact moment when my resignation should take place, to be decided by the best interests of the church. In any case, we shall (D.V.) be together till September, 1902, when I must be absent for four months in Sweden, Germany, and Jamaica; but if the church is still pastorless, I can readily resume my active ministry amongst you for the opening months of 1903.—With sincere affection, yours very faithfully,

F. B. Meyer.

Some Parcels of Books.

WITH the near return of the Christmas season, the question arises, what books shall I buy for children's presents? An answer may be found in the special parcel which Messrs. Morgan & Scott offer for 10s., carriage paid. It contains eight volumes of Rev. E. Payson Hammond's works; a book by A.L.O.E., entitled Percival's Picture Gallery; a tale by Mrs. Hunter, entitled Joe Witless; and the six volumes of "Nettie's Mission" Library; in all sixteen volumes for 10s., as stated above (or 11s. 9d. if for abroad).

Another special offer, which will appeal to preachers, teachers, and all students of the Scriptures, is the 6s. parcel of Biblical works. This includes a copy of Cruden's Concordance (3s. 6d.); a handbook to the Old and New Testament, entitled The Bible Remembrancer (2s. 6d.); The Bible Interpreter, an illustrated dictionary of the Scriptures (1s. 6d.); and two other valuable works: Searching the Scriptures (2s. 6d.), by Dr. J. Anderson, and Christ Lifted Up (2s. 6d.), by Rev. R. Gilchrist. These five books, it will be noted, total up to 12s. 6d.; but the publishers offer the parcel, carriage free, for 6s. (or if for abroad, 8s.). This would make a most useful present for an evangelist, Sunday school teacher, or any other Christian worker.

Yet another special offer, which is of great value at this time, when so many are being turned aside to the errors of Romanism, is the parcel of Protestant books for 9s., carriage paid, including a splendid edition of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, with twelve full-page illustrations, and a steel-plate frontispiece. This book alone is published at 10s. 6d. Then there is a copy of The Catacombs at Rome, by Mr. Benjamin Scott, F.R.A.S.; three of Miss Richardson's books, giving practical experience of Romanism; and forty-two copies of a pamphlet on The Confessional, by Miss Richardson. This latter will be found very useful for distribution. The whole parcel is offered for 9s. (or 11s. 3d. if for abroad).

The publishers, however, make one condition with all these "special offers"—it is that those ordering the same will undertake to carefully place the copies of The Christian (which will be enclosed in each parcel) with some friends not as yet acquainted with the paper, in the hope that they may be induced to become regular subscribers. All orders for these special parcels of books should be sent, with remittance, to Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

Another special offer which has met with a wide acceptance is that of a copy of the "Two-Version" Edition of the Bible. It contains the Authorised Version, with the differences of the Revised Version printed in the margin, so that both texts can be read from the same page. A beautifully-bound copy of this Edition of the Holy Scriptures (price £1) is offered to anyone who secures twelve new subscribers to The Christian. In a number of cases Christian workers, at once concerned for the extended influence of The Christian, and desirous of possessing a valuable book, have set to work with very encouraging results. There is also a Wide Margin Edition, published at 27s.; and, whereas for twelve new subscribers a 20s. copy of the ordinary edition is given, for sixteen new subscribers a copy of the 27s. "Wide Margin" edition, printed on writing paper, an ideal "worker's" Bible, will be presented. Full particulars of this scheme can be obtained on application to Morgan & Scott, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C. [Advt.

Winter Campaign—Bold and Aggressive Action.

The cold weather having set in, we are now engaging The Principal Town Halls and other Public Buildings for the aggressive work of the Kensit Crusade and Wickliffe Preachers. This will mean a heavy expenditure, and we are compelled to make a Special Appeal for £250.

Rigid economy is always practised, but we are holding two or three meetings daily, and have a staff of fifteen workers whose whole time is devoted to the work. God is wonderfully blessing and crowning the labours with success. Ritualists attend our meetings, and the good seed of the Gospel is being earnestly and faithfully sown. We are the only Protestant Society with Two Illustrated Monthly Magazines—viz., "The Churchman's Magazine" and "The Beacon Fire," and both have a large and influential circulation.

Reader, can you help us?

We are most anxious to respond to the many appeals for Missions in Ritualistic Parishes, but we want to Avoid getting into Debt.

We appeal to all out-and-out Protestants to become subscribers. There never was a greater need for bold, aggressive, and determined work than the present. Believing for a generous response,

I am, yours for the Truth,

THE WINTER'S WORK OF
THE WATERCRESS & FLOWER GIRLS' CHRISTIAN MISSION IS OPENING WITH BRIGHT PROMISE.

Its operations comprise:

1. Daily Efforts by Missionaries and Deaconesses to improve the condition, morally and spiritually, of the 5,000 Watercress and Flower Women of London, including an Early Morning Free Breakfast at Covent Garden Market for the needy.
2. The Training of Cripple Girls in the art of Artificial Flower Making, to render them self-reliant and competent to earn their own livelihood.
3. The Care of our Orphan and Destitute Girls at Clacton-on-Sea, which now comprises Twelve Cottages, with accommodation for 250 little ones, exclusive of staff.
4. A far-reaching Gospel Mission, including Bright Services in the Woodbridge Mission Chapel, a Court and Alley Brass Band, with short testimonies, and innumerable other agencies, among both adults and children, for the winning of souls.
5. Constant Visitation of the Homes of the Poor by experienced Missionaries and voluntary helpers.
6. Painstaking Relief in all cases of dire Want and Destitution.

FUNDS ARE MOST URGENTLY NEEDED.

A Heartrending Case.

A Blind Lady and her Husband, and their two daughters, who are Governesses.

Mrs. C. writes: "The mother of my late Governess, aged 68 (and husband, aged 78), entirely dependent on their two daughters, who are governesses. There is no hope of Mrs. ——— recovering her sight, and she suffers great pain. The daughters are unable to earn sufficient to support themselves and parents. The mother used to earn a little by needlework before she went blind. It is very hard on them all, as they have seen better days. Excellent references from doctor and clergy."

The Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, Hon. Sec., the Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will gladly acknowledge donations, or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Notes & Comments

Scriptures for India. In connection with the article, "Scriptures for India," in our last issue, several supporters of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures have been concerned to know whether the proposal would clash with their regular work. It gives us pleasure to say that the Association is supporting the scheme, and that contributions may be sent through the honorary secretary, Mrs. A. Pridham. (See p. 15.)

"Light from the Holy Hills." Those who remember the biographical writings of Rev. Kenneth Moody-Stuart—"Recollections of Brownlow North" and "Memoir of Alexander Moody-Stuart"—will welcome another work from his pen, Light from the Holy Hills: Lessons from Old Testament Mountains. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) The pages are full of spiritual and practical teaching, derived from great incidents and scenes in Sacred Story. There is nothing common place, either in method or substance; but the Holy Hills shed upon our path light that is both welcome and precious. The book is sure to find many readers.

"The Christian" Block Calendar. In the office as well as the home, a silent testimony for Christ is delivered by block calendars, the leaves of which display the date in large figures, with a passage of Scripture in small, clear type beneath. "The Christian" Block Calendar is already widely used, and we have reason to know that it is highly appreciated on all hands. (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

A Pointed Question. If these be the kind of doctrines and the polity you hold, then what kind of people ought Methodists to be? You proclaim the glorious right of individual souls to have access unto the presence of God. You resent the interference of priests. When a man proclaims this, we expect to find that he has got a perfect passion for God and a passion for souls, and this passion for souls is as much the responsibility and privilege of the individual Christian as of the pastor.

So spoke Rev. J. H. Jowett at the great Methodist meeting in Manchester (see p. 19). His weighty message has a wider appeal than to Methodists only; it is a call to all Evangelicals—Churchmen and Nonconformists alike—who rank themselves against the encroachments of priestly domination. We need to keep a constructive policy ever in view. It is not enough to denounce; we must build. The best antidote to error is the proclamation and practice of the truth. At present much Protestant talk is discounted by earnest Roman Catholic work. The world looks to the Church for the "passion for God" and the "passion for souls," of which Mr. Jowett speaks. Alas! too often it looks in vain.

The Coming Winter. The spell of early winter that has visited the country is said to prognosticate a severe season. The prospects of trade are none too bright, and so the probability is that there will be much distress and suffering among the poor in our great cities. This is a hint to all who are humanely disposed to prepare for the inevitable call that will be presently made on their generosity by curtailing all unnecessary expenditure, so that they may have a store laid by, that he that hath may be able to give to him that hath not. The incidence of suffering under these circumstances is often severest on the helpless and the young, who have no chance to provide for the "rainy day." Setting aside the demands of the undeserving, there will be plenty of scope for helping those who are the innocent victims of cold and misery.

Church Attendance. A new controversy is proceeding in the columns of the Daily Chronicle concerning the ancient but ever new question of the paucity of attendants at public services. We always regret, in this kind of correspondence, the introduction of sweeping charges, against either the Churches or the people. No good can possibly come of charging ministers, as a class, with being intellectual cowards, or of seeking simply their own interests. Equally futile is it to lay all the blame upon non-churchgoers. There is very much to be considered on both sides before a decision can be arrived at as to the cause of the manifest abstention of the mass of people from the house of God. Both the Churches and the people who remain outside their pale have grave reason to search for their faults. The former may well reconsider many of their methods, and ask if these are to blame; and the latter certainly need to examine modern life and to ask whether the frivolous spirit which is abroad is not responsible for the obliteration, in men's souls, of the sense of obligation to God.

New Wine in New Bottles While this controversy is proceeding, we have the annual report of the Manchester Methodist Mission, from which it is quite clear that our friends in that city have largely solved the problem of reaching the people. Fifteen thousand people hear the Word of God, every Sunday, in connection with that work, where, a few years ago, scarcely 1,000 persons could be gathered in the chapels. And the great and happy change has come about through the recognition of the principle that new wine must be put into new bottles. Free seats, hearty services, the abolition of all stiffness, and the earnest proclamation of the old Gospel, have combined to make the change from the old order. Wherever men have had the courage to break through old traditions in the name of the Lord, God seems to have abundantly blessed them. For one thing, the old pew rent system will have to go, and the "Free and Open Church" system substituted for it, if men are to be induced to attend our churches regularly.

Britain and America. It is one of the few bright spots in the international horizon just now that the relations of Britain and America are steadily improving, and that former tokens of suspicion or dislike are fast vanishing. A clear understanding, and a firm friendship, based on mutual goodwill, between the two great Anglo-Saxon nations, is not only a guarantee of peace in the civilized world, but a necessary condition of true progress everywhere. It has been entrusted to our race to be the exponents of liberty and equality everywhere, and we cannot uphold these principles against the reactionary forces that dominate the continent of Europe without joining our forces. The provisional signing of the new treaty in the place of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of sixty years ago has only to be ratified by the American Senate, to remove the only outstanding peril of friction between us and our cousins across the Atlantic.

International Delicacy. We are as delighted with the kind and noble sentiments recently expressed towards this country by President Roosevelt, Mr. Choate, and Mr. Hay as we are regretful at the fresh outburst of Anglophobia which, unhappily, has assumed such great dimensions in Germany. It is extremely unfortunate that public speakers and the public Press are not more careful in their references to other Powers. The equipoise between the nations is at present so delicate that the least thing serves to disturb the balance. It may be very stupid for foreign peoples to seize upon the least pretext to attack us; but knowing what we do, the utmost care should be taken to avoid any statement which is likely to cause irritation. The world cannot afford to have these outbursts of race hatred; they outrage the sense of true brotherhood, besides inflicting injury in many ways.

The Future of Palestine. The optimistic speech of Mr. Zangwill last week, concerning the commercial future of Palestine, supported, as it was, with hard facts, will make the Bible students read, with increasing interest, the prophetic words of Scripture, which, in many particulars, seem to be upon the eve of fulfilment. It seems that the Jewish Colonial Trust has 120,000 Jewish shareholders, representing every country in the world, and the dream which they have had of once more becoming the natural tenants and masters of the Holy Land is slowly assuming substantiality. All the great powers are increasing their trade with Palestine, while, within the country itself, preparations are going forward which will make the Promised Land a veritable land of promise. All this is being done whilst the Jews remain "in unbelief" concerning Christ. We have abundant reasons for awaiting a striking change in that country before long.

A Commendable Charity. The Vienna correspondent of the Standard sends an account of a new form of charity which is in operation in many places in Austria-Hungary, and which strikes us as worthy of adoption among ourselves. It is the daily distribution of bread and milk among children up to six years of age. The milk is always boiled, and is consumed in the large, well-warmed rooms belonging to the Charity. All vessels are cleaned and disinfected before and after use. These sanitary precautions are absolutely necessary in the cases of the very poor. Indeed, the whole plan is conducive to health and strength. A similar experiment conducted among our poor children would probably be the physical salvation of thousands of little people who, at present, are deprived of really nutritious food at the very age when their bodies demand it most.

The Abuse of Trades-Unionism.

It is to be hoped that the leaders of trades-unionism will lay carefully to heart the criticisms on the later developments of that movement which are appearing in The Times. The good done by trade organizations in defending workmen from the tyranny of unscrupulous employers will be speedily undone if labourers are not only encouraged, but forced, to limit their output of energy. Twenty years ago bricklayers were in the habit of laying 1,000 bricks as their day's work. Now, an unwritten rule of their union has reduced this number to 400 a day in the case of private employers, and to 330 in the case of the London County Council. This means that the good workman is forced to "level down" the value of his labour to the standard of the idle and incompetent, that the cost of production is vastly increased, and that the rent of workmen's cottages (and all dwellings and buildings) is steadily rising, and that the increased wage earned for less work is minimised in its buying power. It is thus a short-sighted policy in the end for the workman to limit his industry artificially.

The Discipline of Work.

But deeper than this lies the mischief wrought by organizing indolence into a system. The principle is utterly opposed to the true well-being of the community. The old law, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," is at the root of all true social progress and advancement. If the discipline of hard work is to become a thing of the past, we may be sure that, ere long, the national character will decline, and the high qualities which have given us the proud position of supremacy we have won in the world will decay, and with it our commercial and social prosperity. The most charitable construction to be put on the evil in question is that it is a re-action against the tyranny of irresponsible capitalism which marked the earlier decades of the last century. If so, it is time the balance were restored, and that this nation of workers realized the call of conscience to do their best in the interests of all concerned. Class selfishness is a blight, whether shown by employers or employed.

Wealth and Happiness.

The letter of Mr. Carnegie in which he tells the world that wealth does not secure happiness, is, naturally, much commented on in the public press. Other millionaires besides Mr. Carnegie have made a similar confession. Yet the illustration he uses is a little importunate. He declares that if Wagner and Shakespeare—the two "mountain peaks" of music and literature—were taken out of his life, he would be poor indeed. There is another side to the question. What of those, who, so far from being able to indulge any taste for music and literature, have to fight fiercely for bare bread? Where does their happiness come in? Some proportionate degree of wealth is necessary to happiness. Men cannot cultivate quiet minds or hearts whilst they are deprived of life's necessities. Mr. Carnegie is making an excellent use of his money, but the system that has made him is entirely wrong. It was never God's will that some men should amass millions, whilst others should have to fight for life. It is true that wealth does not necessarily bring happiness; but it is equally true that dire poverty drives happiness away.

The Power of the Penny.

Now that the year has swung round to the period when piteous appeals for help are made by institutions labouring for the physical and spiritual welfare of the suffering poor, the occasion arises for each one of us to review what we are doing to help to reduce the burden of human sorrow, and to ask ourselves whether we ought not to do more. Perhaps one of the greatest hindrances to the exercise of charity is the tendency to decry the value of small sums, and to abstain from giving at all because it is not in our power to give much. The power of the penny is not recognised as it ought to be. In charity, as in other directions, it is the mickle that makes the muckle. Quite recently it was stated that a night's shelter and some food could be given at a London refuge at a cost of only three-halfpence! At this season, when there is so much want and misery around us, it is helpful to consider how our individual joy seems to be sufficient for scores who have but little happiness in their lives, and the thought ought to bear fruit in grateful efforts to do good in his name who hath given us all things.

Romanism in Fiction.

A leading Romanist journal has lately been advocating the introduction into Rome's methods "a system for spreading Catholic truth," by setting aside her most intellectual men for "the apostolate of the pen." It is noteworthy, however, that most of her recent writers in fiction have shown a deep-seated antagonism to the Romish claims to infallibility and to the political daily life of the Vatican. A writer in the current number of the Edinburgh Review fails to account for this, and does not furnish a very satisfactory explanation of the influence of Rome in attracting a certain order of perverts, but he urges forcibly the grounds why there cannot be any general development of Romanism in this and other Protestant countries.

> History and experience amply justify the fear of the intrusion of priestly power into the affairs of civic and private life. . . . The instinct of national self-preservation rightly makes itself felt in the presence of a non-national, or even an anti-national society, and history since the Reformation shows that nations which broke with Rome chose the right way. The Roman Church arrests intellectual and economic progress, encourages doubtful virtues, and saps those which are essential to the growth of the human race. It requires the unconditional surrender of the individual in all matters of faith and morals, the abnegation of that free will and responsibility which is the great gift entrusted by God to man.

More Roads to Rome.

Preaching in London a few days ago on the occasion of a Requiem for departed members of the English Church Union, Rev. F. F. Irving urged extreme unction as a means of sanctification and as "one of the seven means of grace whereby the finger of God touches every state and condition of life." He added that by extreme unction "the sick soul is strengthened for final conflict, and the results of sin are remedied." The sermon was a defence of the Roman teaching of Purgatory, and it was concluded by an assertion that "the doctrine of Purgatory is the necessary correlation of the Christian doctrine of sin."

The Reading of the Bible.

We are thankful to find that some very strong and commanding voices are being raised on behalf of true and pious reading of the Bible as against that "literary patronage" which has become the prevailing fashion in so many circles. Dr. Parker devoted his last Thursday's sermon entirely to this one subject, remarking that he for one would not allow any man to deprive him of the grand old prophetic texts in which Christ is clearly preshadowed. "They who would remove Christ from Isaiah liii., narrowing its interpretation to some local 'servant of God,' do not understand the first principles of Biblical Interpretation." Dr. Forsyth, also, chose the same subject upon the occasion of his first appearance in London, since his appointment to a professorship. He also earnestly spoke against the modern tendency, and gave his positive principles in these words:—

> There is a particular habit of mind that we bring to the reading of inspired books. Above all, in reading the Bible, we must read religiously—not only historically, but religiously. It is not enough that we should feel the beauty and charm, but we must respond to it in order to feel its power. The best use to which we can turn the Bible is for the cultivation of our personal relationship with God.

The True Test for the Ministry.

The relation of the colleges to the churches, and the supply of candidates for the ministry, is one of the recurrent problems of the day. Periodically the importance of the question is brought before us in the religious Press, and the qualifications of candidates are being just now busily canvassed. Perhaps we do not hear enough of the most important of all qualifications—the spiritual standing and character of the candidate. Too often a desire to enter the ministry as a calling is taken for granted as a sufficient proof of genuine conversion and fitness to teach others the way of life. Fortunately the ministry does not offer many extraneous attractions to those who would make it their profession. Still, there are certain features of it that appeal to the unregenerate mind, as occasional scandals prove. It will minimise the possibility of these painful revelations, if the utmost care is taken by all college authorities to reject those who fail to show unmistakably that they are genuine Christians, and help to raise the standard and influence of the ministry in all the churches.

Confirmed Drunkards.

The conference convened by the Home Secretary to consider the need of further assistance to the inmates released from Inebriate Reformatories has now been held. The gathering was a highly representative one, and many phases of the question were discussed, and suggestions were made as to the establishment of what may be termed "half-way homes" between the reformatories and the miserable surroundings of temptation and vice from which the unfortunate beings generally come, and to which, alas! they are too often forced to go back. No doubt the "transition" from the period of wholesome restraint to the old life of unhealthy freedom is too sudden, and the results only too often are fatal to reformation, and no doubt a desirable system of co-operation between the inebriate reformatory authorities and the philanthropic workers will now be organized. The burden will, of course, have to be borne by the charitable, and not by the brewer and the distiller who create the need for these gaols and refuges. Perhaps some day it may strike the Home Secretary that a simpler and more efficacious method still for the State to adopt would be that of stopping the supplies of confirmed drunkards. That certainly seems to commonsense outsiders a better plan than the present one.

Practical Papers.

On "Independence."

IS any word sweeter than this to the generation of to-day? It is a long one, glibly used, but insufficiently considered by too many of its devotees. What pictures it conjures up of new-found liberties, and of old-time restrictions for ever swept away! The air is full of assurances that "Britons never shall be slaves," and in various forms the spirit of the cry steals insidiously within the circle of the Christian home.

It is an instructive incident, that recorded in 2 Kings vi., of Elisha and the sons of the prophets. Said they, "The place where we dwell with thee is too strait for us. Let us go . . . and make us a place where we may dwell. And he answered, Go ye."

Here the spirit of independence asserted itself. True, their present prosperous state was due to association with their patient leader, but now they felt quite able to stand alone, to manage their own affairs without him, and to "kick away the ladder" by which they had risen. Elisha evidently so understood them, and thought it well to let them test their strength, for he answered, "Go ye!" It was not until one less self-confident than the rest urged, "I pray thee, go with thy servants," that he agreed to accompany them.

It is good, this sense of "want of room"; when we recognise that we have "not already attained," that we are capable of still greater things; when early conditions become "too strait"; when the bud, expanding with increased vitality, feels it must burst forth into flower; when the fledgling must needs try its growing strength upon the morning air; when as men we have to put away the swaddling clothes of childhood, and step out into new responsibilities. By all means let us give free scope to all that is best within us, to such holy aspirations and worthy ambitions as will glorify God and bless our fellow-men.

But just here is a dangerous cross-road. Shall we follow the path of selfish independence, or that of loyalty to the God to whom we owe so much? As in the days of the prodigal, so now, the human heart casts longing eyes at the freer scope that lies beyond expedient limitations, whether in the mental or physical, the moral or the spiritual sphere. In proportion as we depreciate the antecedents to which we are so greatly indebted, we are apt unduly to appreciate ourselves, and to say: "Let us go and make us a place where we may dwell." When this spirit of independence thus asserts itself, it is well to call a halt, and honestly face the question: Is it going to lead me up or down—nearer to God, or further from Him?

So while we pass over such boundaries as would limit our usefulness, let us not be unmindful of their wholesome restraint over our childhood's faltering steps. Restrictions are a help as well as a hindrance; if they hedge us in, they also form a protecting barrier against much that is harmful from without. Let us cast away whatever will prevent our enjoying the liberty which would lead us into the fuller light of God; but let us beware lest we despise any of those reasonable safeguards which shield us from the insidious power of the enemy of our souls.

At times we have all chafed at the restraints and prohibitions of religion, when "Thou shalt not" seemed to be her only watchword. But as we have known her better and have been "willing and obedient" to her voice, we have found that "her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

"Go ye," said Elisha, who was to these young men the representative of his Divine Master. God may sometimes let the wilful soul have its way. "He gave them their request—but sent leanness into their soul." "That they may know my service and the service of the kingdoms of the countries." (2 Chron. xii. 8). Note also the comparison in Deut. xxviii. 47, 48—"Because thou servest not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things; therefore shalt thou serve thine enemies which the Lord shall send against thee, in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things."

What a blessing it proved for the sons of the prophets that one among them had the discernment which led him to invite Elisha to go with them, and thus saved them from a terrible mistake—who said in effect, "It is not fair to Elisha, still less to ourselves, to go forth upon this uncertain errand, leaving behind the one to whom we owe our prosperity and our ability to go forth at all." Mercifully, the kindly prophet complied; and by-and-by they found they could not do so well without him as they had thought. It is to him they call when trouble appears, and glad enough are they to accept his proferred aid.

Ah, how often have we thus treated God! "We have turned every one to his own way." We have diverted legitimate desires, which should have developed from lofty ideals to noble deeds, into paths that led us far from Him. We have thought we could make our way better alone, until some trial exploded the fallacy of our "independence," and we realized that only in Him do we truly "live, and move, and have our being." How fortunate, then, that the nameless young prophet scented the danger from afar before the journey had begun.

Many lives have been wrecked for lack of such foresight. The spirit of independence has led multitudes beyond the circumscribed area of morality and goodness of living, to go out into the world, like Dinah (Gen. xxxiv. 1), to investigate it for themselves; and they have had to "mourn at the last, and say, 'How have I hated instruction and my heart despised reproof; and have not obeyed the voice of my teachers nor inclined mine ear to them that instructed me'" (Prov. v. 11-13).

Others have been allured by mistaken ideas of "intellectual greatness," with its sweet reasonableness and insidious persuasive power, and have all too soon found themselves adrift upon the dreary seas of unbelief. Nicodemus and Saul of Tarsus conquered because they bowed; they stooped in order that they might overcome, and gained thereby eternal wisdom and renown.

These are days of much activity, and more now than ever people are free to come and go as they like. Witness the liberty in this respect which young women enjoy—in the city or in the field—as compared with twenty or even ten years ago. Pre-eminently this is an age of "go"; is it not time we paid more heed to the word "Come"?

In our Saviour's day, when his disciples "had no leisure so much as to eat," He bade them "Come apart into a solitary place and rest awhile." One of the most precious of the Old Testament promises is, "The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in." We all like the "going out," and in our best moments are glad to seek God's blessing, or at least desire the protection of his care. But are we as amenable to the "coming in"? Consider the state of our leading thoroughfares in the evening when the business houses are closed; see the crowds of young men and women thronging the streets—careless, frolicsome, perhaps, but not vicious. They are "doing no harm" maybe; and yet many a mother's heart at home is distressed or burdened with anxiety lest danger should befall her dear ones.

The "going out" means pleasure and amusement—possibly innocent; the "coming in" means helping to bear a mother's burden, or sharing a sister's care. Let us think not only of ourselves. "The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in," but if we want his protection for the former we must be willing to submit to Him as regards the latter. If we desire the blessings of the freedom, we must not despise the equal blessedness of the restrictions which a wholesome home life involves.

We have known of young Christians who have offered themselves for mission work abroad because they "could not get on with their people" at home; like the young prophets, seeking wider spheres of usefulness because they found the dwelling with Elisha too strait, too narrow, too restricted. Dear reader, be faithful in that which is least; for not till then can you be trusted with that which is greater.

Therefore, whether it be pride of intellect, bidding you follow human theories as to the truths and purposes of God, rather than to be guided by his Word as the "lamp unto your feet, and the light unto your path"; whether it be attractive plans of life that you hope to carry out without reference to God's will; whether it be the choice of a business, a profession, an amusement, a partner of life, or whatever the form in which the allurement comes—be not led astray by the will-of-the-wisp of your own desires; but "humble yourself under the mighty hand of God that He may exalt you in due time." "What man is he that feareth the Lord? Him shall He teach in the way that He shall choose" (Psa. xxv. 12). Let your motto be, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Then in your influence over others, being thus in harmony with God yourself, strive to cultivate the kindly, wise Elisha-spirit, that so tactfully guided the steps of his young disciples, that you too may direct into the way of peace the ardent spirits around you, full of life and force and "go," who, like yourself, can do so much for God's kingdom, if consecrated to his will. Thus may each of us do something toward fulfilling our Master's wish "Compel them to come in." G.

The Watch.

How strange the mystic watch we keep,
With our beloved dead!
Before we lay them, tranced in sleep,
In their lone narrow bed.

'Tis they—and yet no word they speak,
With sweet, familiar sound!
Repose how awful, yet how meek,
How changeless and profound!

But, 'tis not they! Our hearts must break,
E'en by the precious form!
Life, life alone can still the ache—
Life, tender, true, and warm!

Hark! the high word that conquers pain,
That word of trumpet tone;
Thy sleeping ones shall live again
When Jesus wakes his own!

O day of days! "The Lord has come!"
They catch the glory-word!
With Him they rise to life and home—
For ever with the Lord!

"Missionary Day" at Manchester.—Mr. Leonard K. Shaw writes: "The readers of The Christian may be interested to know that the financial result of 'the Missionary Day' has enabled the council to distribute £700 amongst the various missionary societies represented. This includes the cost of placing a fresh missionary in the needy field of South America. We praise God for this result."

*Waiting for Service.

By the late ANNA SHIPTON.

"Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation" (Isa. xxv. 9).

GOD'S chosen witnesses, separated in his sovereignty, and anointed by the Holy Spirit for work and warfare, have to watch and wait before they gain an intelligent understanding of the position assigned them of the Lord, and many a one, accepted and known of Him, is unacknowledged or despised of man.

Even the prophet, when sent of God to anoint a king in the place of Saul, who was rejected, judged by the sight of his natural eyes; and looking upon the first-born of Jesse, the tall and comely Eliab, he at once supposed the Lord's anointed was before him. But not from among the warlike followers of Saul had the Lord elected the future king and leader of his people, who was to shadow forth our divine Shepherd-King. It was the youngest of the family—the stripling shepherd—whom God had chosed as the future captain of his people Israel.

How often we have heard the obversation: "If only such an one were converted, what a valuable labourer would he prove in the vineyard!"

This is like Samuel judging after the sight of the eyes. The very strength and endowments of the natural man are not infrequently as a citadel fortified against the spiritual nature, and they have to be subjugated, and perhaps destroyed, before the Lord can reign in the temple He has ordained for his own glory; for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." The vessel set apart for the Master's use will bear upon its chiselled surface the mark of the Master's hand, and every stroke is hieroglyphic of deep meaning to the observant soul; read here in the partial unveiling of his purposes of love, to be seen hereafter in its full beauty and glory.

What fierce assaults have such to bear, what desperate conflicts, what casting away of treasures the world prizes, or even our brethren esteem, before the chosen vessel can be used in the heavenly kingdom! Many poor, weak, infirm, and unlettered, set at nought like the stone which the builders rejected, are yet ordained by God to be among the athletes in the kingdom. For to-day, as in the day of the prophet Samuel, "the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

Many may be gathered together for sacrifice in sight of the world, yet the chosen vessel may not be among them. Like David, with his father's sheep in the wilderness, there is, maybe, one whose secret life has been a preparation for the position to which he is suddenly called, not by man, but by God—one whose conflicts are known only to Him who has delivered his servant out of the fangs of the lion ready to devour, and out of the fierce embrace of the bear, and of whose victories the world has heard nothing.

The Lord might have protected his servant from these dangers, but He did not. He delivered him out of them, that he might trust in the same Almighty strength in his encounter with the champion of the Philistines in the sight of two armies, and in all the varied trials of his future life. He would be thus led to look for the presence and strength of the Lord of hosts, who "giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might He increaseth strength. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall; but they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint" (Isa. xl. 29-31).

Many a waiting hour was needful to enrich the harp of David, and many a waiting hour in the wilderness will gather for us a psalm of "thanksgiving, and the voice of melody," to cheer the hearts of fainting ones here below, and to make glad our Father's house on high.

What was the preparation of the son of Jesse for the songs like unto which none have ever sounded on this earth? The outrage of the wicked, which brought forth cries for God's help. Then the faint hope in God's goodness blossomed into a song of rejoicing for his mighty deliverances and manifold mercies! Every sorrow was another string to his harp; every deliverance another theme for praise. The vicissitudes that would have silenced any other bard, or unstrung harp that God had not put into his hand, only enriched David's strains of melody. . . .

To wait for God, and to suffer his will, is to know Him in the fellowship of his sufferings, and to be conformed to the likeness of his Son. So now, if the vessel is to be enlarged for spiritual understanding, be not affrighted at the wider sphere of suffering that awaits you. The divine capacity of sympathy will have a more extended sphere; for the breathing of the Holy Ghost in the new creation never made a stoic, but left the heart's affection tender and true. "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy" (1 Peter iv. 12, 13). Oh, beloved, be of good courage! If there be a wide-spreading vine, there must be a more extensive pruning; but then, in the great harvest there shall be a more abundant fruitage. The greater the capacity of the vessel formed to honour, and chiselled by the hand of the Heavenly Workman, and refined in the furnace heated seven times more than is wont, the more shall be the overflowing with the exceeding riches of his glory, laid up for it before the world began.

*On Winning Souls.

By Mrs. JOSEPH TRITTON.

IS it true, can it be true, that even many Christians who have received the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and who have found pardon, peace, and everlasting life in Him, are content to enjoy these blessings alone, not seeking for others to share them also? No wonder, then, that the majority of mankind are indifferent about the destiny of their souls.

The value that God sets upon souls is seen in the wonderful gift of his Son for their redemption; yet "there is nothing else of less account in the eye of most people." Might not the touching words be uttered now: "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me" (Lam. i. 12)? If the constraining love of Christ is in our hearts, we shall yearn over perishing sinners as He does, and in thus pleading with souls become co-workers with Him. The salvation of men was the sole object of that stupendous sacrifice He made for us. What must sin be in God's sight, that it needed such a sacrifice to put it away? The Lord Jesus is waiting and longing to save now, and gives us the message of his love to tell to all. Hundreds of hearts around us are hungering for that divine love which alone can satisfy them. Oh, let us try and win them for Him and his glory. We read, "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied." What an honour to be able thus to add to his satisfaction! He calls us to rejoice with Him over every lost sheep that is found, and share in the joy of the angels in heaven over every repenting sinner. Oh, to know more of this burning love and passion for souls, that we may taste of his joy, and be able to say of some soul we have won for Him—

"It was not for naught He suffered,
It was not in vain He died;
In the vine of the Father's planting
Doth a living branch abide.

One more is brought to his kingdom,
He hath saved one more for his crown;
'Tis 'the joy that was set before Him,'
When He came to earth's darkness down."

"Ye that are Spiritual."

(Gal. vi. 1.)

THE dangers we run from the world, the flesh, and the devil, we all know theoretically, but perhaps I am not alone in thinking that we may at times overlook them practically, and so be overtaken in a fault against which, because we are seeking to walk in the Spirit, we fancied ourselves proof.

Indeed, we are not proof against any sin, while the devil has devices, and while we ourselves are in the flesh. But we are proof while we abide in Christ (John xv. 5).

One of the sins I have in my thoughts is that of self-assertiveness, such a hateful thing, that we are quick to notice it in another, but in oneself it can easily grow up—so gradually as to be unnoticed.

We wonder at the rebuffs we receive, at the constant friction, at the continual difference of opinion, at the unreasonableness of others, and so forth; when suddenly the Lord in his goodness opens our eyes to see the fault in ourselves!

We are all prone to this or some other form of self. Alas! how many of us have to grieve over the misuse of authority—the pride of mastery, engendered in our hearts by the care of a household, a Sunday-school, a class, a workshop, a mission-house, a parish.

Do let us beware, and be frequently asking God to grant us "the first approach to feel of pride or fond desire." It is so easy for grey hairs to be upon us while yet we know it not (Hosea vii. 9). We need to watch and pray lest we enter into this most insidious temptation, for it was while men slept that the enemy sowed tares—while we sleep to this spiritual danger!

How much disgrace is every day brought upon God's cause by the pride of his servants—often those in prominent places, for surely though we may not see it, others do.

How often have I thanked God for night falling on my day of failure, that I may have a fresh start with daylight. Is not this a parable of God's ability to put out of his sight our sin, and to make us ever again and again to appropriate his promises?

"It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not; they are new every morning" (Lam. iii. 22, 23).

Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association.—This long-standing agency, founded by C. H. Spurgeon, is quietly continuing its useful work. About fifty districts in England and Wales are being largely influenced for Christ through the instrumentality of the colporteurs, who not only disseminate the Scriptures and Gospel literature, but carry on home mission work as house-to-house visitors, as well as conduct evangelistic missions. The Association is unsectarian and evangelical. During the present year special efforts have been made in the interests of aged colporteurs. The funds of the society have of late suffered considerably through lack of support; with an increased income the Association would be able to respond to more of the numerous calls to take the Gospel to needy parts of the land. Communications may be addressed to the Secretary, Pastors' College, Temple Street, London, S.E.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, December 1. Hebrews i.

THERE has been a good deal of discussion about the authorship of this Epistle. Some ascribe it to Paul, others to Apollos, or some disciple of the Hebrew-Christian school. To us it matters comparatively little as to who was the author. The quality of inspiration is in the book. This bush burns with fire. We trust the multiplication table, though we have no knowledge of the author, and we may readily accept this book for the unique power of dealing with heart and conscience as with the finger of God.

Its object is to establish the superiority of the religion of Jesus Christ over the Levitical system, which it superseded; and therefore the author takes up, point by point, that divine and venerable institution, and shows that it has no glory by reason of that which excelleth. Place electric lighting against candles or even lamps, and every sane person appreciates its excelling brilliance—so of the Gospel as contrasted with the Law.

The special subject in this chapter is the pre-eminent glory of the Lord Jesus. In the earlier verses (1-3), this is affirmed in a superb succession of statements. He is the one all-sufficient and comprehensive revelation of God, destined to inherit all things, the organ of creation, the far-travelled beam of the Divine nature, correspondent to the being of God as an impression to the die, the upholder of the system of Providence and historical development throughout the ages, and, above all, the perfection of human salvation and redemption. Worship Him, my soul, the Word of God Incarnate!

Next (4-14), He is contrasted with the angels, and shown to be ever so much better than they. Many Scriptures are quoted to point the contrast between the only-begotten Son, the King and Creator of all things, and the angels that do his bidding. Let us make more of their loving ministry.

MONDAY, December 2. Hebrews ii.

The first four verses of the second chapter really belong to the argument of the first. It was the Jewish belief that the law had been given through the instrumentality of angels (Acts vii. 53). Surely, then, the Gospel, which was first uttered by the Son Himself, must have higher claims than the law. If an offence against the law of Moses involved terrible penalty, what will befall us if we drift with the current which is always bearing men away from Christ? Note that word drift (R.V. marg.). It is drifting that ruins men. For one that resolutely turns his back on the Saviour, a hundred drift from Him.

Moreover, the age to come—that is, the age which was future when these words were written, but is present to us—is expressly the age of human supremacy: not of poor, fallen man as we know him, the crown rolled from his head, the sceptre dropped from his hand, but of man as he is represented in the risen Lord, who is seated at the right hand of the Father, crowned with glory and honour. This statement may be challenged. Some may dispute the fact that Jesus is a representative man. But what are the characteristic traits of humanity? Death! He tasted death for every man. Suffering! He was made perfect through sufferings. Dependence on God! He that sanctifieth and they that are being sanctified are all of one. Faith! He says, "I will put my trust in Him." Flesh and blood! He took part in the same. Temptation! He himself hath suffered, being tempted. "In all things it behoved Him to be made like unto his brethren." And to man, in the risen and ascended Lord, is given the governance and power of this age. Oh, that in Him we might take our rightful position, and exercise the authority which is our own! Glory to God, that He who did not succour lost angels, has succoured fallen men!

TUESDAY, December 3. Hebrews iii.

Our Lord is not only superior to angels, but to Moses, the great leader of the Jewish commonwealth. Let us consider Him in the light of this comparison. Moses was God's sent ambassador, and Jesus is the Apostle of our confession. Moses often acted as the priest of Israel, and Jesus is the High Priest of his Church. Moses was faithful in the trust reposed in him, and Jesus absolutely did all things which the Father gave Him to do.

But how infinitely superior the Lord Jesus to Moses! He built the house in which Moses served. He was the Son and Heir, whilst Moses was at the best a strong and noble servant. He realized the purposes of God in his own Person, whilst Moses could only give a testimony of the things which were afterwards to be spoken. Therefore the sin of refusing Christ is much more aggravated than that of refusing Moses.

It was no light thing to refuse Moses. Remember the penalty which was incurred by those who hardened their hearts of old. They missed the blessed rest of God, they incurred the Divine displeasure. Their bodies fell on the desert sands, wrapped around with the winding-sheet of the wilderness. Let us take heed. Let us beware of an evil heart of unbelief, for unbelief is always the fruit of an evil heart. Let us see to it that we do not fall away from the living God. Let us look after one another as travellers do in the frost and snow of high latitudes. Let us hold fast the beginning of our confidence. Let us not be disobedient, for disobedience and unbelief are close akin.

WEDNESDAY, December 4. Hebrews iv.

There is, beloved, a rest for weary souls, and for thee—not yonder alone, where the wicked cease from troubling, where mysteries are revealed, and tired bodies are replaced by the tireless nature of the Resurrection—but here and now. The gates stand wide open from where thou art into the very rest of God—the rest which He has enjoyed from the foundation of the world, nay, from all eternity. "We which have believed do enter into that rest."

It is the rest of completed work. "God rested on the seventh day from all his works." His is not the rest of weariness, but of satisfaction and content. What should He do more, since all is finished, and is very good? The seventh day rest commenced thus, and therefore on the seventh day the Lord lay in Joseph's tomb. He also rested from his work of redemption, as God did from his of creation. Did He not say, It is finished? So when we believe in Jesus, we no longer weary ourselves to pile up our merits and secure salvation by our own good deeds. We accept the finished work which Jesus wrought on our behalf, and enter into his rest.

It is the rest of sufficient power. For He who creates is well able to maintain. He ceased to work as Creator, but to everlasting ages by Him all things must subsist, as the God of Providence. Into that power we, too, may enter. Does He not say, "All that I have is thine."

Oh, let us be careful lest we fall on the desert sands, victims to our failure to trust; lest we carry about with us burdens which only Christ can bear, and attempt work beyond our own power. Faith hands over responsibility to Him, and receives from Him grace upon grace. But beware, for the Word of God cannot be deceived. Yet be of good cheer, for we have a great High Priest, who is passed through the heavens.

THURSDAY, December 5. Hebrews v.

Our Lord Jesus is greater than angels, greater than Moses, and greater than Aaron. He resembles Aaron in some respects. He is taken from among men. He was called of God to his blessed office. He offers gifts and sacrifices for sins—that is, his own blood and righteousness. He bears gently with the ignorant and erring. He knows what strong crying and tears are, what suffering means, what obedience is. But, oh, how immensely superior to any priest of Aaron's line! He was a Son, though He learned obedience. He is perfected in his ability to succour us. He becomes the Author of eternal salvation to those who trust and obey Him.

Let us take heart. If Aaron did so much for the ignorant and erring of his time, what will not the Son of God do for the ignorant and erring to-day?

Too many of us, alas, are not able to participate in these inner mysteries of the kingdom. The churches are full of babes. The babe-life is characterised by its inability to feed directly on the full meat of Scripture, by its constant craving for the breast of the human teacher, by the feebleness of its spiritual life, by its failure to discriminate between good and evil. Let us leave the childish things behind, and by the exercise of the spiritual sense, together with careful feeding on the Divine Word, let us go forward to all the fulness of the perfect stature of Christ.

FRIDAY, December 6. Hebrews vi.

How many are perturbed by this passage for want of understanding its real significance. The writer is anxious that his disciples should pass into the higher ranges of Christian experience. He does not wish to remain in the perpetual re-discussion of the elements and rudiments. Cannot we leave the alphabet and grammar, he cries, and go on to the wide fields of literature? He mentions four foundation truths: Repentance from dead works, which was represented in the old covenant by baptisms or washings. Faith towards God, which was set forth in emblem by the laying of the hand on the head of the victim-lamb. The Resurrection of the dead. The eternal Judgment. And he supposes to leave these, as the builder leaves foundations, resting on them most heavily, when they are most hidden, and he is furthest away from them in the sunny air.

Then he says that when men have been once enlightened and tasted of the heavenly gift, it is impossible to renew them to repentance, whilst (see R.V. margin) they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame. But as soon as the soul abjures its sinful apostasy from the Saviour, and turns back to Him in faith and contrition, it may be renewed, and restored to its former position in the blessed love of God.

But no such fears need be entertained of those who give evidence of faith, and love, and hope (9-12). For such eternal blessedness is guaranteed by the word or oath of God, who cannot lie. These are final. Let the anchor of your hope grapple, then, in the promises of God. They will hold it in the fiercest storms; and gradually an unseen hand will draw the storm-lost part of your life within the veil.

SATURDAY, December 7. Hebrews vii.

In the grey dawn of history, in the most fragmentary way, Melchizedek is introduced, as giving Abraham bread and wine. He was probably the king of the tribe that gathered around the famous site of Zion. A saintly character was his. Years after, the Psalmist accosts the Messiah in prophetic ecstasy, as a Priest after the order of this great priest-king. Our writer, led by the Holy Spirit, seizes on this allusion, and elaborates its full meaning and beauty.

Jesus, like Melchizedek, is always King of righteousness, before He is King of peace. He is without father as to his human origin, and without mother as to his divine. He has no genealogy, so far as the great and mighty of this world are concerned; He is possessed of eternal existence, and He abides a priest for ever. But if so, then He must be superior to the priests of the line of Aaron.

Abraham paid tithes to Melchizedek; and since Levi was represented in his great progenitor, Levi the lesser acknowledged the superiority of the greater, the prototype of our Lord.

Besides, Levi's order was destitute of perfection; our Lord's is perfect. Aaron was constituted by a carnal ordinance, and died; Jesus is filled by the power of an indissoluble life. It is witnessed of Him that He ever liveth. Aaron and his sons had infirmity; Jesus is the Son, blessed and perfected for ever. Their priesthood changed, and passed from hand to hand; his is unchangeable. Wherefore He is able to save to the uttermost all who will open to Him the secret sore and need of their souls. Have you gone to Him with yours? F. B. M.

Hopeful Outlook in China.

WE have from time to time called attention to the work of the Society for the Diffusion of Christian and General Knowledge in Shanghai, known at home by the brief designation of the Christian Literature Society for China. Writing on recent developments, a correspondent says:—"Three Governors of provinces, each ruling over some twenty to thirty million people, have lately appealed for advice to the hon. secretary of the Society, Rev. Timothy Richard, whose personal influence with the literati is largely due to his broad and generous sympathy with the best aspects of Chinese thought.

"Yuan Shih-kai, the young Governor of Shan-tung, who saved the lives of all foreigners in his province last year, and who in January of this year issued what was called the 'Magna Charta' of Shan-tung, inviting the return of missionaries to his province and promising them protection and assistance, wrote in May to Mr. Richard for a list of the best books in Chinese on modern learning. He explained that he did not intend to promote any of his 500 expectant Mandarins until they had passed an examination in Western science and learning. Yuan Shih-kai rules over some 30,000,000 people, almost as many as the population of England. Mr. Richard says:—'If the eighteen other Governors of China follow Yuan Shih-kai's example, which is not impossible, nor even unlikely, as I have heard more than one speak of a similar plan, who will not say that God has wrought marvels in China, of which we can scarcely realize the tremendous importance?'

"Prompted by the knowledge of the Emperor Kwang Hsu's desire for reform, and supported by the powerful pamphlet, entitled 'Learn,' by Viceroy Chang Chih-tung, Mr. Richard telegraphed at intervals of a few weeks to officials at Si-ngan-fu, where the Court stayed for one year, urging the importance of reform in education. 'He that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully.' On August 29 of this year two reform edicts were issued. The first abolishes the long essay on the classics in favour of short essays and articles on modern subjects and Western learning, Western laws, Constitutions, and political economy. The second edict insists on military candidates passing an examination in modern methods of warfare. Modern military academies are to be established in every province.

"Mr. Richard urgently appeals for funds to translate and publish the books required for high-class teaching. Already there is a great demand throughout the Chinese Empire for books that have not yet been translated. The new officials in Shan-si, where the worse massacres took place last year, are among those seeking enlightenment. Good Chinese writers are required, and are to be had, but the missionaries are handicapped for want of means, as such amanuenses are expensive. Well written books are as essential for the literati (who are the rulers of China) as are books of a certain standard necessary for the scholars of our own country. As early as February there was a great demand for Consul Gardner's treatise on political economy, translated by Rev. J. Sadler, of Amoy. A similar text-book on international law is called for. Mr. Sadler is now busy translating Seeley's 'Expansion of England.' Such books as those just mentioned are permeated with Christian teaching.

"It lies with the Christians of the West to see that in seeking for bread their fellow-creatures in the new China that is fast arising do not receive a stone. The Chinese themselves are coming nobly forward in response to the appeal. Three Chinese friends of Mr. Richard have just given £4,000 (promised last year just before the troubles began), to build a High School for Chinese boys in the foreign settlement in Shanghai. This school will be under the care of missionaries. Another Chinese friend, Mr. Loo, has presented a unique library of rare Chinese books as the nucleus of a public Chinese library in Shanghai. He has also promised Tls.5,000 to build new translation offices."

Other important gifts have been made and promised, both in China and England. The present moment is full of opportunity, and those who know the work are hopeful that Christian generosity will rise to the occasion. Further particulars of the Society and its operations may be had from Rev. W. Fisher, hon. sec., 146, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

In Southern Russia.

VI.—Over the Black Sea.

KUTAIS, a charmingly situated little town on the River Rion, was the last prison-station on our way to the Black Sea. A heavy rainfall of several days had transformed some of the streets of Tiflis into rivers; from the same cause, when we reached Batoum, we found the railway bridge so damaged that the train could not go over it. What might have been a fearful disaster became, in the merciful providence of God, a passing inconvenience, as, lighted by torches, we crossed on foot the temporary bridge of planks, to enter a train on the other side.

The following mid-day, we embarked on board the Grand Duchess Xenia. Here we said good-bye to our faithful guide and clever interpreter, Mr. Patvakan Tarayans, who, since we reached Rostov, had been taking care of us all, as well as interpreting for Dr. Baedeker.

Born of Lutheran parents, and fond of learning, he passed through his college examinations, and went on to the University of Riga, where his health broke down, obliging him to return home. A Swedish missionary, then at Schemacha, advised him to go to Sweden for industrial training. While there, boarding with a missionary, he was converted, and then his heart's desire was to proclaim the love of Christ to his own people. After four months' stay he returned home, and set to work at once, attending to business during the week, and preaching the Gospel on Sundays. He had learned enough Swedish to be able to read religious newspapers in that language, and to benefit others by translating suitable extracts into Armenian.

AN ANSWERED PRAYER.

Reports of Dr. Baedeker's visit to Sweden led him to pray that the Lord might send his servant also to the Caucasus. In due time this prayer was answered. Without knowing how ardently his presence was desired, Dr. Baedeker came to cheer up a little flock. Afterwards he took Mr. Tarayans with him on his prison tour in Russia and Siberia, where he rendered splendid service as companion and interpreter, being able to speak several languages correctly. The trip lasted six months.

On his return, Mr. Tarayans found himself closely watched by the police. After receiving from them two early morning visits in search of papers or letters, and seeing his personal freedom endangered, he removed to Sweden. At the invitation of Dr. Baedeker he came to England at the time of the Y.M.C.A. Jubilee. Through his friend he was able later to get on to Constance in Roumania, where he formed a school, which he taught for seven years. Now he is in Russia again, the Government permitting him to return under certain restrictions.

AN UNLOOKED-FOR OPPORTUNITY.

Mr. Tarayans told us of villages high up in the Caucasus where churches and priests are unknown, and where the people for the most part are unable to read, having no idea whatever of the Gospel. While preaching once in such a mountain village, he saw a man saddling his horse. "Where are you going?" he asked. The man named a distant village unknown to the evangelist, who at once decided to accompany him. It happened to be Sunday afternoon when they arrived at their destination. The people were sitting about the streets.

"If any of you will give me a room," said the new comer, "I will speak to you from the Book of God." They opened wide their eyes. A blind man, the richest man in the village, offered his house, and the meeting took place, and at the close the man exclaimed, "You are my debtor, young man!" "What do you mean?" "Why, that you must come again. You owe me another visit. We want to hear more of your wonderful story."

Dr. Baedeker having obtained a permit for our Armenian brother to visit prisons like himself, he began the work directly on leaving us, taking Bibles to some prisons on the way, which, from lack of time, we had to leave out of our programme.

The Black Sea, called so because it can look black and frown very grimly at times, was calm and beautiful to us, though a fellow-passenger told us that he had once made a voyage from Odessa to Batoum which lasted seven days, during which they had not seen the sun, through the continuous and unbroken fog.

On the Sunday morning we stopped at Novorossyjsk, a rising town, formerly Persian, but since 1829 under Russian rule. The picture, seen from the boat, was attractive enough to make us wish to go on shore. We strolled a little about the new quarters, but besides pigs and chickens could not discover anything of interest in the unpaved streets. Kertsch, near the Sea of Azov, was reached the next morning. Here Mithridates, the great opponent of Rome, is said to have been buried. In the evening we landed at Feodossyja, the chief commercial harbour in the Crimea.

At Jalta, a favourite resort of Russia's fashionable society, the hitherto few passengers were joined by an elegant throng of ladies and gentlemen, the fairer sex being in preponderance. Continuing our voyage along the coast of the Russian Riviera, with the pretty Jaila Mountains in the background, we passed the Imperial Palace of Livadia (where Czar Alexander III. breathed out his life), and many other points of interest, until we reached that city of many sad memories—

SEBASTOPOL.

No trace seems to be left of the horrors of the war which raged here almost half-a-century ago, save the museum, where old maps and relics, and especially a collection of photographs of operations upon the wounded, reveal to the horrified eyes some of the cruel sufferings which war inflicts. The cemeteries are another memento. On the morning of our arrival we visited the Russian "Brethren's Burying-ground," where 2,700 Russian soldiers are buried, among whom are Prince Gortschakoff and Count Todleben. In the afternoon we went to memorable Balaklava—a pretty little harbour nestling between bare rocks, and then to the English Cemetery on Cathcart Hill. It presents a modest aspect as compared with the handsome monuments over the graves of Russian heroes; but it is well kept and profusely planted with flowers, in genuine English style. Among the 500 graves is that of General Cathcart, at one time Governor of Cape Colony, who in 1813 fought with the Russians against the French, and by the cruel contradiction of a soldier's fate, in 1854 suffered death at the hand of the former allies.

It was already dark when we returned to Sebastopol, where we were expected to tea by a Russian lady, who some years ago had for a short period worked in the East-end of London with Miss Macpherson, after whom and others she now lovingly inquired.

The previous evening we spent with the family of Pastor Friesen, of the Mennonite Church, who, owing to ill-health, had been obliged to give up his pastorate at Odessa, and to settle down at Sebastopol, reputed for its sunny and healthy climate.

A memorable meeting closed the day and our visit. Called together by our lady friend, who is zealous in the cause of Christ, a little community of believers assembled in the evening, listening with sparkling eyes to the message of love of cheer from the brethren of foreign lands. They were plain men and women, whose laborious lives had been transformed into a shining for Him, and who, in a language without words, conveyed to us that they knew the Lord's command, Love one another. The Scriptures for India.

DEAR SIR,—It is now nearly thirty years since the Lord laid it as a burden on the heart of one of his children (Mrs. Robertson, now residing at Hampstead) that it was the bounden duty of the Church to give freely to the whole world what it had received freely from its Great Head, viz., the Word of Life. After a few years of earnest prayer and patient, persevering effort, through the good hand of God upon her, an association was formed which had for its one aim the sending of this blessed Book to all peoples and tongues on the face of the globe, that they might read in their own tongues the wonderful words of life.

Ever since then, at the little monthly prayer meetings, prayer has ascended to God—and not alone here, but from the little praying bands in connection with the Association, which have by degrees circled the globe—that God would stir up the hearts and consciences of his children in this favoured land to see their privilege and responsibility to share with others this great and unspeakable gift of the Bread of Life. You can imagine, therefore, the intense joy it is to our hearts to hear of this full and complete scheme for providing our fellow-subjects in India with some portion of the Word of God, and we wish it very hearty success. It is, indeed, a marked answer to prayer, and we trust only the beginning of a yet fuller scheme for providing every individual for whom Christ died with the message of his salvation. Nothing is impossible with God or to the Church filled with his Spirit.

I just wish to add that, as we have received letters from some of our subscribers, who mention the scheme with sympathy and yet do not wish to deflect their subscriptions from an association which has been patiently working with a similar object for so many years, we think we can meet our subscribers' wishes, and help in the grand scheme at the same time, by forwarding sums sent to us marked specially for India to the promoters of the scheme; and in order to make this widely known, will you kindly insert this letter?

Bp. Miraglia and his Flock.

PASSING over the St. Gothard a fortnight ago, we had the pleasure of spending several hours at Chiasso with Bishop Miraglia, who has been called "the Modern Savonarola." Your readers may be aware of the work of reform initiated by him at Piacenza, as a priest of the Roman Church, which has led to much persecution, and to his excommunication by the Vatican. It has also resulted in the formation of a large congregation of Bible-reading and devout people, mostly of the poorer classes, hungering for the Gospel.

On Saturday, November 2, there was inaugurated at Piacenza a building for public worship, forming the nucleus of the new church, or Oratorio of San Paolo, which is to be built when sufficient funds are provided. The placard announcing this event, which was posted all over Piacenza, is a remarkable document, emanating as it does from a man till lately a Roman priest. It denies the authority of the Pope, and of the necessity of a priesthood, and shows a surprising degree of spiritual enlightenment.

The joy of the inauguration was somewhat marred by the absence of the much-loved Bishop, who, on a trivial charge of libel, was sentenced to ten months' imprisonment, to escape which, on the advice of his friends, he left the country. Feeling that in the interests of his people he cannot much longer absent himself from them, it is probable that he will shortly return to Italy to undergo the sentence.

In these circumstances of trial and persecution, the practical sympathy of English Christians in the work of building a suitable church would be a great consolation both to the Bishop and to his flock.

The Y.M.C.A. in America.

IN commemoration of the Jubilee Year of the Y.M.C.A. in this country, the annual dinner of the International Committee was held at the Waldorf-Astoria, on November 14. About 350 guests were present, many military and naval men being among them.

The first associations on this continent were organized in Boston and Montreal in 1851. Some idea of the progress made during the last twenty-five years may be gained from the following figures. Since 1866 the number of associations in North America has risen from ninety to 1,476; of student associations from one to 584; of members from 15,493 to 268,477; of secretaries and other employed officers from twelve to 1,609. There were no railroad associations in that year, but now there are 167; no buildings, while now there are 391; and no associations reporting gymnasiums, as 507 do now. The total value of buildings is now 21,445,415dols, and the annual expenditure of the associations has risen from 50,000dols to 2,930,399dols.

In the Sioux Indian work, over 1,000 young men have been enlisted in a uniform course of Bible study, prepared by the Indian secretary. Of the student associations, thirty-six are in theological seminaries, sixty-five in medical and other professional schools, and the remainder in colleges, universities, and normal and preparatory schools. At least 14,000 students are enrolled in Bible classes, most of which provide for daily study.

The work has followed American soldiers wherever they have been called, and more than 300 stations were reached during the past year.

The Latest Attack on the Day of Rest.

SIR,—Will you allow me to call the very earnest attention of your readers to the latest attack on the Sabbath institution?

At the meeting of the Licensing Committee of the Middlesex County Council held on November 14, the Chairman, Mr. Montague Sharpe, said that hitherto every licence issued during the eighteen years he had been connected with the county had contained words providing that the house should not be opened on the Lord's Day, except for religious services, with or without the performance of sacred music. . . He thought it desirable to state in public, in order that there should be no misunderstanding, that the Committee were going to report to the Council in December, and ask that they be authorized to grant what he might shortly call seven-day licences for music in approved cases. . . It would be invidious to licence the Alexandra Palace and exclude other halls.

It should be remembered that the Licensing Committee of the Middlesex County Council grant licences for music, &c., to 411 persons, and if they obtain the power to grant seven-day licences to all these persons the influence must be disastrous not only to the religious life of London, but also to the preservation of the Sunday as a day of rest for the many thousands of persons employed in the musical profession and the amusement industry.

The Licensing Committee intend to make their application to the Council at their meeting in December, and it is suggested that Christian electors residing in the constituencies of the Middlesex County Council should at once write earnest letters to their representatives urging them to oppose in every possible way the proposed seven-day licences. I shall be very happy to give any of your readers further information.

—Yours faithfully, Charles Hill, Secretary.

The Broussa Orphanage.

THE Protestant Orphanage for Armenian children in Broussa, Asia Minor, is sadly in need of more supporters.

The Principal, Rev. Gregory Baghdasarian, who established it twenty-five years ago, wrote in a recent letter:—"We have now seventy-two orphans; the winter is near, and they greatly need warm clothing, shoes, blankets, and many other things. Our family consists of ninety souls, and £900 is needed for all their wants in the year. There are more than twenty-five orphans who beg to be admitted. Please do tell your friends to help us speedily."

This Orphanage has always been a happy home for Armenian children, and as I have known it since its foundation, I can recommend its claims.

Rev. Dr. HENRY'S CAMPAIGN.

AT the conclusion of the fruitful series of meetings held in Birmingham, Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and the Fisk Jubilee Singers proceeded to Bristol, where the campaign was inaugurated on Saturday last, when, at 3 p.m., the magnificent Colston Hall was filled to its utmost capacity by an audience of between 4,000 and 5,000 children, mostly drawn from the Board Schools, and presided over by Rev. George Jarman (chairman of the Board). It was a sight never to be forgotten, well worth the journey from London to look upon. In this wonderful gathering, and in the other preliminary arrangements, we are more indebted than words can express to the energy and business capacity of Mr. W. W. Turnbull, Secretary of the Western Temperance League, and his willing helpers. The importance of these children's gatherings cannot be over-estimated. There is not only the personal and lasting impression made on each child, but as living factors in the mission they carry the news of it far and wide with lightning speed. Dr. Henry addressed the enormous audience in language easy to be understood. He set forth the infamous traffic as a ravenous beast which spares neither age nor sex, rich or poor, but especially luring the young to its den, as successors to the tens of thousands of people who are destroyed by it every year. Signs of the children's interest in their special meeting and the power they possess to make a movement known were seen in the crowds which flocked to the afternoon and evening meetings.

On Lord's Day last the Colston Hall was not only filled to its utmost limit, but thousands were unable to gain admission. Certainly, we thought that Sheffield, Leeds, and other cities did wonders in securing crowded audiences again and again; that Manchester, with its brief space of time for preparation excelled them all by bringing 14,000 people under the sound of the Gospel on one Lord's Day; that Birmingham did remarkably well, but Bristol, in some respects, has excelled t' m all.

Tuesday evening last was d oted to one of those deeply interesting meeti s in which the saloons of America are portrayed on the screen, accompanied by Dr. Henry's vigorous descriptions, and followed by a series of animated pictures by our friend Mr. G. A. Barclay. For this meeting a charge for admission was arranged as an endeavour to meet the heavy expenses. It is time, indeed, that this great work should be placed upon a sound financial basis; this desirable position can easily be attained by total abstainers coming to the help of the Lord by praying, working, and giving. R. S.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Dr. Henry and the Fisk Jubilee Singers, Nov. 28, Portsmouth (Town Hall); 30, Dec. 1 and 2, Brighton (the Dome); 3, Croydon; 4, Beckenham; 5, 6, Hull; 7-9, Newcastle-on-Tyne; 10, 11, Sunderland; 12, Darlington; 13, Sheffield; 16, Woodford; 18, Bromley; 19, Devonshire Square Baptist Church, Stoke Newington Road, N.E., at 7.30 for 8.

Liverpool Medical Missionary Society.—Thirty-seven years ago a few friends in Liverpool united in the foundation of an auxiliary to the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society; but very soon the apparent needs of their own city emboldened them to divert their efforts to it, and to launch the Liverpool Mission. How rapidly the work has grown may be gathered from the annual report. The consultations last year numbered 41,018, and the nurses paid no fewer than 2,549 visits to patients in their homes. Those attending the dispensaries are not only addressed collectively with a simple statement of God's way of salvation, but many are pointed individually to the Saviour. In every sense it is a distinctly Christian Mission, offering the best possible treatment to the sick poor, and the members in attendance afford ample proof both of the medical treatment and a wide appreciation of the combined ministry. Many testimonials are offered to this effect, and the confession is not infrequently made that the attraction to the Mission has been the prayer which accompanies the prescription. The secretary is Mr. J. C. Proctor, 15, Brunswick Street, Liverpool.

Elijah: The Prophet of all Time

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A., of All Souls, W.

II.—Hidden and Cared For (1 Kings xvii. 2-6).

THE first recorded word of the Lord to Elijah was connected with the prophet's personal safety and supply. It is at the moment of his flight to Cherith that God's plan for his servant, and his careful discipline of this great and strong character, are first revealed to us. Doubtless there had been many revelations received, and valuable lessons learnt, during the unknown early period of his life in Gilead. But of these Scripture is silent. God's first open message to his servant is contained in the words, "Go hide thee . . I have commanded the ravens to feed thee."

There is meaning in this. The word Elijah may mean "God is my Strength." The Gilead period of Elijah's life might be well described in the vivid language of the 18th Psalm. "It is God that girdeth me with strength. He maketh my feet like hinds' feet. He traineth mine hands to war. Mine arms do bend a bow of brass." But in the next verse the Psalmist adds, "Thy gentleness hath made me great." It is this part of the prophet's training that commenced at Cherith. As the Gilead period left him, there was danger of his becoming a fanatic. The zeal for righteousness which led him to pray for judgment needed to be tempered by a fresh experience of the practical sympathy and personal love of Jehovah.

A CRITICAL MOMENT.

2. The word of the Lord came to him at a critical moment. There was danger of reaction and relapse when his first interview with Ahab was over, and Elijah began to realize the full meaning of what he had done. In the mountain fastnesses of Gilead he had been concerned only with the honour and majesty of Jehovah. Better a thousand times that his country should be desolate than that Jehovah should be degraded to the level of the idols of Canaan. So he was moved to pray for judgment upon the land, only half realizing what it meant. Borne along by fiery zeal and jealousy for Jehovah, he sought his first interview with Ahab, and uttered his solemn pronouncement.

The message delivered—we know not whether the king was in the royal palace surrounded by his courtiers on some State occasion, or taking part in a great religious festival in the Temple of Baal, or strolling quietly and unattended in field or vineyard—the prophet turned abruptly away. He had no reason to linger in the royal presence. He neither feared the frown nor sought the favour of the idolatrous king. He was proof alike against blandishments and against threats. But before long, with quiet and leisure, reflection began, and the tempter was busy. He saw that he himself would be involved in the judgment he had evoked. He had terrible visions of the misery and suffering which must soon come upon the nation, and of the bitter hatred they would feel against him, the author of it all. How plausibly Satan would suggest that he had made a grievous mistake, and that anyhow his life would under present circumstances be unbearable. Then it was that the word of the Lord came to Elijah.

It was a beautiful revelation of God's tender and practical sympathy. Elijah had forgotten himself in his zeal for God. He now learned that God had not forgotten him. No thought of his own personal safety or comfort had been allowed to intrude when, jealous for God's honour, Elijah prayed for judgment upon Israel. But God draws near at once, and announces the plan which He Himself had devised for the prophet's protection and support.

3. The Divine plan was one which made large demands upon his faith. The objections to it were obvious and weighty. To stay near Jordan was to stay within easy reach of Ahab's vengeance. To expect ravens, birds of prey so fierce that they even neglect their own young, to feed him, was indeed, to trust to an unlikely and precarious provision. The whole plan, moreover, seemed commonplace, and hardly worthy of a great prophet. Enoch had been called away to be with God before judgment fell upon his generation. Might not Elijah have expected similar heavenly succour, or, at least, to be sent on some honourable mission to Egypt or Syria? To remain in hiding, like a fugitive, in some secluded ravine, and dependent on birds of prey for daily subsistence, was certainly not an attractive arrangement. But it was God's plan, and in the exquisite delight of finding himself under the manifest and direct guidance of God all criticisms were silenced. It is easy, as George Herbert puts it, to give God both our eyes when we know that we have his hand.

4. THE WISDOM OF GOD'S PLAN.

(a) Elijah was spared the pain of beholding the desolation in Samaria. Perhaps if he had watched day by day the acute suffering of the nation, the half-starved children, the broken-hearted mothers, the despairing and desperate men—if there had been sounding in his ears continually, the sobs and the curses, the wailings and the threatenings of a howling but impenitent nation—his faith might have faltered, or his sympathies might have petrified. But in the seclusion of the quiet brook at Cherith, his peace was preserved, and his heart kept open and tender.

(b) His spirituality was deepened. His mind was stayed upon God. He learnt to enjoy the society of God. He was probably about a year at Cherith. For it was in the third year of his stay at Zarephath that he was bidden to announce the end of the famine, and the famine lasted, we know, for three and a half years. Did the days drag wearily? Was the time heavy upon his hands? Solitary confinement is the most terrible form of punishment for criminals. To be left to themselves without seeing the faces of their fellow-men often drives prisoners mad. But it is very different when God is our gaoler. Elijah was probably alone all that time at Cherith. But God was with him. And, with God as his Teacher, what precious lessons he would learn from the running brook, and the overhanging rocks, and the mossy sward. What visions he would have of the "pure river of water of life," and "the Rock of Ages cleft" once for sinners, and the green pastures of the "exceeding great and precious promises?" Though, perhaps, only a small area of the vault of heaven was disclosed between the walls of his divinely chosen prison, the blue sky by day and the bright stars by night would lead him to endless inspiring meditations upon the nearness of heaven and the faithfulness of God.

(c) Each day began and ended with a special sacrament. Oh, the joy of finding himself evening and morning, day after day, the "special ward of Providence." Twice every day God thought of him and sent him bread and meat. Manifestly it was God's doing. The word rendered "ravens" may, by a different pointing (there are no vowels in the original Hebrew manuscripts: the points or vowels were introduced in the seventh century after Christ), be rendered "merchantmen" or "Arabians." But this cannot be the right reading, as the regular visits of any human almoners would have disclosed the prophet's hiding-place, and surely they would have brought him a week's food at a time, and would never have visited him twice a day. The food is never stale, however, when God provides it.

What precious lessons the visits of these ravens must have taught him. How unlimited the power of God which led wild ravens to deny their appetites, to conquer their instincts, and to wait day after day upon a lonely prophet. What victories could not the same power win over the evil dispositions of the heart of man! Had, in his own case, jealousy for Jehovah somewhat degenerated into hatred of Ahab? Had indignation and disgust at the idolatry of the nation driven out pity and love? Surely, as, day by day, he saw these birds of prey made gentle by God's discipline, and remembered that he himself was in the same strong hand, each visit of the ravens must have added gentleness to his character, as well as confidence to his faith.

How blessed are they who leave the planning of their lives and the moulding of their characters in the hands of perfect Wisdom and Power and Love.

Witnessing Among Students.

FEW, comparatively, of the Christian public of this country have more than a vague idea of the work and aims of the British College Christian Union. The work and objects of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, which now forms a department of the wider B.C.C.U., are better known through meetings held when members are setting out for their work in heathen lands. Its importance will, however, readily appear to those who realise its size and extent (embracing about 3,000 students in some eighty colleges), and the class of men and women whom it reaches.

The object of the Union is to lead students of British universities and colleges to become disciples of Jesus Christ, to unite them in seeking a fuller spiritual life, and to enlist them in extending Christ's Kingdom throughout the whole world. When it is remembered that the students of to-day are to be the leaders in every department of our national life and thought a few years hence, the possibilities and importance of such work among them appear well-nigh infinite.

The work goes quietly and steadily on, not so quickly as might be wished, but still men and women are being won for Christ; they are being strengthened in the fight against sin, and equipped for serving Him wherever He may place them. During the past year about 1,800 students were engaged in systematic devotional study of God's Word, meeting together for the purpose in Bible circles week by week, and in most colleges daily prayer meetings were held. Student travelling secretaries are employed to visit the colleges and to stimulate the work of the local unions; and text-books for Bible and missionary study are published. As now constituted, the Union consists of three departments:—(1) The Student Volunteer Missionary Union, which seeks to unite those whose purpose it is, if God permit, to become foreign missionaries; to bring before all students the claims of the foreign mission-field as a life work; and to emphasise the responsibility of the whole Church of Christ with regard to the watchword, "The Evangelization of the World in this Generation." (2) The General College Department, whose object is to organize and affiliate Christian Unions in universities and colleges (other than theological colleges), and to aid such unions in the promotion of Christian life and effort among students. (3) The Theological College Department, whose objects are the same as those of the other departments, in so far as these are applicable to theological colleges.

At the present time the Union is in special need of practical sympathy and help. Its work does not come prominently before the Christian public, and consequently it is deprived of much of the prayer and financial help which it might reasonably expect. At present the income falls very considerably short of the growing needs of the work; and the result is that, for some time past, a very heavy burden has fallen upon the executive, who, in addition to their studies and their special duties, have the extra burden of trying to raise money for the Union. The total income for 1900-01 was £1,709 7s. 8d, and the expenditure £1,795 3s. This, with an adverse balance at the beginning of the year, leaves the Union to begin 1901-02 with a deficit of over £300. Students, as a rule, are not able to give much, and the Union is obliged to ask for the help of outside friends, which it does on the ground of the supreme importance of the work. The honorary treasurer is Mr. R. L. Barclay, 54, Lombard Street, E.C. Full information regarding the organization may be had on application to Mr. J. M. B. Duncan, General Secretary, 22, Warwick Lane, E.C.

Services in Hospital.—The London Hospital receives from 13,000 to 15,000 inpatients yearly. The City missionary is a well-known figure in the various wards, where he pays over 6,000 visits, holds some 500 services, and distributes 5,000 tracts during the course of a year. On Sundays eight services are generally held, lasting about twenty minutes each, and though necessarily the results are not easily traced, yet from time to time cheering evidence is forthcoming that the seed does ripen into fruit.

Camp Homes in South Africa.

THROUGH the dark cloud of war which has been hanging over South Africa for so many months, one ray of light has been shed by the work done for the spread of the Gospel among the soldiers of our own Army. To the value of the efforts put forth by various agencies abundant testimony has been borne by very many of the soldiers themselves, and by officers and officials in high quarters. Especially prominent among such labourers have been Mr. and Mrs. George B. Osborn Howe, whose Camp Soldiers' Homes will be long remembered as places where the Lord's people ministered, unsparingly and ungrudgingly, to the souls and bodies of many thousands of men.

The hand of the Lord was visible in the chain of circumstances by which Mr. and Mrs. Osborn Howe were led back to South Africa just at a time when loving hearts and gentle hands were so sorely needed. Arriving in King William's Town on September 27, 1899, they were in time to see the Berks men before the regiment left for the front. The results of visits and conversations was that the battalion was followed up at once to Stormberg; but as the difficulties met with there seemed, for the time being, insurmountable, the messengers of the Cross passed on to the other half of the same regiment at Naauwpoort, where a warm welcome and much encouragement awaited them.

Going on next to De Aar, they met with the first opportunity for the opening of a Home. No helpers were available, nor had means been contributed for the purpose; but no time was lost. By drawing on personal resources for the initial expenses, a beginning was made in the back yard of a railway employé, and in the open air. The rudest materials only were at hand. Old-fashioned railway oil-lamps hung from the branches of trees, the seats were rather rough planks resting on oil-drums. But soldiers in the field can see behind such things to the warm love which prompts the efforts, and these were appreciated at their true and high value. Loyal help was rendered by the members of the Railway Mission—"to whom," says Mr. Howe, "we owe so much."

An appeal to old friends at Cape Town soon brought workers, followed by a marquee, which did excellent service as a meeting-place and for other purposes. These, however, meant growing expenses and responsibility; but they were manifestly of the Lord, and in faith, with much prayer, all were loyally accepted. Thanks are tendered to readers of The Christian and other friends, who, when the need was made known, have been led to send adequate provision for every requirement. A committee was formed by the Cape Town Y.M.C.A., which co-operated with the Soldiers' Christian Association in this country in the sending of workers and raising funds.

From the very first days the military authorities began to depend on the marquee. Early one morning when Mr. Howe went out before breakfast, he found a long line of men stretching across the camp. They had formed up in single file to the door of the yard waiting for it to be opened. No time was lost in making tea, and the men went in by sections, holding their helmets for food. The sergeant said they were famished, as tents and everything had been packed at dawn, preparing to entrain for the front, and, unless help were given, they would go fasting after heavy fatigue.

One by one during succeeding months opportunities for extension and the opening of additional Homes presented themselves, and were taken advantage of until they numbered twenty-seven at De Aar, Naauwpoort (two), Orange River, Sterkstroom, Arundel, Rensburg, Bushman's Hoek, Cyphergat, Burghersdorp, Achtertang, Van Zyl, Norval's Pont, Knapdaar, Stormberg, Bethulie, Springfontein, Bloemfontein (two), Bethany, Edenburg, Viljoen's Drift, Elandsfontein (two), Krugersdorp, Pretoria, and Kroonstad.

The primary aim has always been to carry on spiritual work; but it was soon determined to add the sale of simple refreshments, such as tea, coffee, and buns—with an understanding that as a general rule the men in stationary camps should pay, while those in hospitals and the sick passing through might have free supplies. There was, however, to be a free issue of writing paper and envelopes, with ink and pens, and so cordially was the offer received that the expense on this one item was a great drain on the funds. On special occasions whole regiments were invited to a free meal.

To inform our readers of the present position of affairs, Mrs. Osborn Howe writes:—

Although we have returned to England, the work in connection with the Homes, which are still open, is entirely in our own hands. The able superintendents, in whose charge we have left them, send us monthly reports. The total sum that has passed through the books during the two years, amounts to £60,000. A surplus of £4,000 we have handed to the South Africa General Mission, for the purpose of erecting a permanent Memorial Home at Pretoria.

Though the conditions of the war have changed greatly, the Homes are as much required as ever. One evening, a few weeks ago, the Scots Guards and West Yorks Regiments passed through Elandsfontein; and, though refreshments were charged at lowest cost, the drawings in five hours amounted to £80. Testaments, Stirling stories, and tracts were freely distributed, along with newspapers and magazines, the men expressing the keenest appreciation.

The spiritual work at the Homes continues to prosper. At Bloemfontein, Bible classes are the special feature. At Kroonstad, there have been striking instances of blessing. After a recent meeting the men asked questions, and there were cases of restoration and conversion. From the other Homes we have accounts of large attendances at the Gospel meetings, and of men being brought to God.

An urgent appeal is made for friends who will undertake to post literature to the men holding the bridges and block-houses along the lines of communication. Of the loneliness and monotony of their existence it is difficult to convey any adequate idea, and Mrs. Osborn Howe will be glad to furnish interested friends with addresses and necessary information. Letters of inquiry (not parcels) should be addressed care of Mr. George Henry, Craigmore, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

Our friends are anxious to place on record personal testimony on their own behalf, and that of their helpers, that in all their contact with the soldiers they "have never seen or heard of a single occurrence that would bring a blush to any cheek." They had been in close touch with the sick and dying in hospital, who have spoken of their sins and confessed them to God, but "never a word of confession as to ill conduct towards the enemy or their women and children." They send us the following statement:—

Since our return from the front we have been painfully impressed by the anxiety evinced by many in regard to certain charges against our troops. Until now we have refused to take up any question which might divert time and thought from the work before us, that of giving spiritual and material help to the soldiers, but, in face of the evident perplexity among Christians, we feel it would now be criminal to be silent.

May we, therefore, set before your readers the following declaration:—

(1) We have lived among the troops at the front from the time we opened the first Camp Home for them at De Aar in October, 1899, until September, 1901. During these twenty-two months we have never seen or heard of a single occurrence that would bring a blush to any cheek.

(2) Our staff of forty-five civilian and seventeen soldier helpers, distributed between De Aar and Pretoria, have been, like ourselves, in closest possible touch with the soldiers, and have never heard of a single case of outrage or ill-treatment.

(3) We have a wide acquaintance with the chaplains, with the Army Scripture Readers, the helpers connected with the Soldiers' Christian Association, the South Africa General Mission, and other workers. They one and all have indignantly denied the accusations against our soldiers, and have given us instances of great kindness shown by the troops towards the helpless women and children.

(4) We have been in close touch with sick and dying men in hospital who have spoken of their sins and confessed them to God, but never a word of confession as to ill-conduct towards the enemy or their women and children.

(5) Our own experience covers life inside many of the camps, as well as in the towns of the Orange River Colony and Transvaal. We ourselves advanced in the van of the victorious troops of the Third Division, and we were close on the heels of Lord Roberts' army as it entered Bloemfontein, and also close on its advance into Pretoria. We saw nothing then or afterwards that we could not tell to a gathering of school girls.

(6) When living in the Orange River Colony we were in the midst of the farm-burning district, and witnessed Lord Roberts' efforts to spare the people suffering by issuing warning proclamations. We saw how the officers waited till the farmers had had time to digest these repeated warnings, and then with what reluctance both officers and men went to carry out the work of destruction, but we never heard of a case where there had not first been some overt act on the part of the enemy. We do not pass judgment, we only state facts.

(7) When the first Concentration Camp was formed we were on the spot, and also saw others spring up.

We admit that there has been suffering; but we solemnly affirm that the officers in charge of the several camps known to us were only too anxious to make the helpless people as comfortable as possible. We have seen the huge cases and bales of comforts for the inmates, and know that in order to expedite the despatch of these things military stores and ordnance have been kept back. When our troops were lying in their blood-stained garments after the engagements around Paardeberg, the principal medical officer had to request the aid, through the Camp Homes, of our Comforts Committees to supply under-clothing, simply because the Railway Department could not cope with the enormous transport demand. We had the utmost difficulty in getting a few sacks of clothing through. Yet, at a later date, the pressure on the railway department being as great, no difficulties were allowed to hinder supplies of food and comforts from reaching the women and children of the enemy in the Concentration Camps.

(8) A story of reported outrage at a Dutch mission house in the slums of a large town was found, after personal investigation, to have been anything but an outrage as the result proved. The young soldiers, who entered the house when the door was opened in answer to their knock, withdrew after they had discovered that the ladies who occupied the house were missionaries, nor had anything been removed or injured. But the garbled story, with its misuse of the word "outrage," reached a district in Cape Colony, where it did no little mischief in fanning the flames of animosity and rebellion. Thus the reported "outrage" was not even a common assault.

It may be said that our love for the soldiers has warped our judgment. We would say we love God, and we love truth more than the honour of our soldiers. If there was another side we should not hide it. We know how keenly our men feel the stories which are circulated by their own countrymen, and we would earnestly beg our readers to suspend judgment until the facts in connection with this subject can be fully known.

Geo. B. and M. S. Osborn Howe,
Hon. Directors Camp Soldiers' Homes.

Among City Postmen.

FOR years past a good work has been carried on among the postal employés at home and abroad by the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association. In connection with this a Central Institute has been established for carrying out the general purposes of the Association, and in which are set apart rest and reading rooms for the City postmen.

The need for these rooms will be better understood when it is considered—1st. Most of the men live too far from the General Post Office to return to their homes more than once in the twenty-four hours. 2nd. Many of them cannot do their work at one time, but have two or three times of duty each day. 3rd. They are, in the Institute, brought under Christian influence, and kept away from public-houses in the intervals between their hours of duty. There is just now a growing desire among these men to win their comrades for Christ.

The members pay a small yearly subscription to the Institute. This, however, helps the expenses only to a very limited extent. Sir George Williams, Mr. Albert A. Head, and several City gentlemen are interested in this work. There is at present a great need for further and continued support. Further information will be gladly given by Colonel Elliot, Hon. Treasurer, P.T.C.A. Senior Institute, 17, Bartholomew Close, London, E.C.

The Birds' Nest, Dublin.

DEAR SIR,—As daughter of the late Mrs. Smyly, who was so long connected with the Birds' Nest and other kindred homes and schools, may I suggest a way of helping the work, now left without its chief human supporter?

I have started an association of friends (not to interfere with the usual subscriptions) who will be glad to give or collect a penny a week. I want 5,000 such friends. Their weekly pennies would amount to £1,000 a year.

I want to make this known through your columns, and to ask those who are willing to help, either as subscribers or collectors, to write to me for cards and booklets, and "Weekly Penny" papers, which tell about the homes and schools. Address, Mrs. J. G. Watson, Hurstwood, Woodford Green, Essex.—Yours truly, Mary E. Watson.

Saving Scottish Orphans.

AT the annual meeting in connection with the Orphan Homes of Scotland, held in Glasgow on Tuesday of last week, a new and powerful testimony was borne to the goodness of the Lord in providing for the fatherless and the outcast.

In his opening remarks from the chair, Lord Provost Chisholm described with enthusiasm how Mr. Quarrier strove to strip the undertaking of everything like institutionizing his children. They were the members of his larger family; Mr. Quarrier presided over them with a father's care, and Mrs. Quarrier with a mother's love. In this Mr. Quarrier was ably assisted by other members of his own family, and that spirit which he manifested was sent down, till it permeated all the workers in connection with the various cottages in which the children are—he would not say housed—cared for, loved, protected, and blessed.

WHERE THE MONEY COMES FROM.

But Mr. Quarrier's efforts were not confined to children. In the Consumption Sanatoria, Mr. Quarrier had already made to some extent, and wished to make to a greater extent, provision for the treatment of victims of consumption, the scourge of our country. What to ordinary mortals seemed the most wonderful thing was the way in which Mr. Quarrier was supplied with the money to do all this work? He got it where he had always got it—from the Unfailing Source. He got it from those whose hearts the Lord had touched, and who out of love to Him, and care for the children and the needy, had confidence in the administration.

He regretted that there were no efficient means of dealing with the children of the streets. They continue the perplexity of the magistrate and the shame of the city; but imagination almost failed to conjecture how much worse they would be, if the large number who had been taken from the streets or the possibility of reaching the streets, and cared for at Bridge of Weir, had been left to roam about.

1,426 BOYS AND GIRLS.

The annual report, submitted by Mr. R. A. Bryden, stated that the year closed was Mr. Quarrier's thirtieth in connection with the Homes and the thirty-seventh of his work among poor children. The summary showed that during the year 228 new cases had been admitted, making a total of 1,426 dealt with. These have been disposed of as follows:—Outfitted and sent to domestic service, trades, and situations, &c., 244; deaths, fourteen; leaving in the homes on October 31, 1901, 1,168, of whom 681 are boys and 487 girls.

In the Consumption Sanatoria 182 non-paying female patients were treated during the year, and there were 1,400 attendances at the dispensary. The amount received during the year in answer to prayer was:—For the general fund, which includes the keep of the homes at Bridge of Weir and the City Home Refuge and Mission—including £1,249 11s. 6d. earned by working boys—£15,957 13s. 9¾d.; for Building Fund, £15,316 3s. 9d.; for Consumption Sanatoria, £9,273 0s. 5d.—making the total amount for all purposes £40,546 17s. 11¾d., besides large quantities of clothing, provisions, &c., estimated to amount in all to £2,000 in value.

HELPING TO HELP THEMSELVES.

In connection with the City Home work, regular Gospel meetings had been held, and thousands of tracts had been distributed, 325 homeless wanderers had been provided with food and bed for one or more nights.

At the Children's Night Refuge any child under fourteen who is homeless and destitute is received irrespective of hour, inquiry is afterwards made, and the child is kept, restored to relatives, or otherwise helped. Young women, who may be without proper home, were taken into the Training Home for Young Women. This corresponds to the Working Boys' Home, where the average number of lads had been about seventy. Situations were found for them, and endeavour is made, where possible, to apprentice them to trades.

The accounts of the Consumption Sanatoria showed that £9,273 was received, which, added to the balance from the previous year, made a total of £16,458 8s. 10¾d. The expenditure amounted to £8,868 12s. 6d., leaving a balance of £7,589 16s. 4¾d.

Among other speakers, Lord Overtoun described the Homes as an object-lesson in faith and the power of prayer. Dr. E. Duncan and Sir Thomas Glen Coats also spoke.

Mr. William Quarrier personally expressed his thanks for the liberality shown in the past, and his confidence in the future. The sums wanted for next year included £100,000 to build additional consumption sanatoria, £20,000 to provide for the treatment of epileptics, and £40,000 for the work in connection with the Orphan Homes, besides other expenses.

A Good Work in East London.

THE completion of twenty-five years' evangelistic and philanthropic labours by Rev. Thomas Jackson was made the occasion of rejoicing by the many admirers of his work in East London. At a large public meeting, held in Clapton Park Tabernacle, at which all sections of Evangelical Christian Churches were represented, the following resolution was passed:—"That we express our pleasure and gratitude to God for the completion by Rev. Thomas Jackson of twenty-five years' missionary and philanthropic work in East London. We notice that through Mr. Jackson's efforts property to the value of about £40,000 has been acquired, 1,200 adults received into church fellowship, ten Sunday-schools and ten Bands of Hope established. In addition to this, hundreds of thousands of the poor in East London have benefited by the various social agencies which Mr. Jackson has established. We rejoice with him in the remarkable success which has attended his varied labours, and earnestly pray that he, with his devoted wife, may be long spared to carry forward the work to which their lives have hitherto been devoted."

In responding to this resolution, Mr. Jackson said that his wife and himself had been practising all the economy possible in their domestic affairs with a view to presenting to the Lord a thank-offering on that occasion for his many mercies to them during the past twenty-five years, and for the privilege of having been permitted to toil for Christ and his poor; and they had pleasure in giving the sum of £25 to the social funds of Clapton Mission. Mr. Jackson added that he very highly valued the expressions of appreciation received from so many friends in London and various parts of the world. He mentioned the visit he had recently received from two Japanese from Kyoto, Japan, who informed them of their interest being excited in his work through what an English sailor youth had testified of blessing that had been received by him through the social ministries of Mr. Jackson's mission. Rev. W. Thomas, Mr. H. A. Kennedy, Mr. E. C. Rawlings, and other friends gave addresses; and many were the written and spoken assurances of continued sympathy and prayer for Mr. Jackson and his devoted wife.

The Protestant Month.—An esteemed correspondent says:—"It may be well to call attention to the fact that November is specially a month of Protestant Anniversaries. November 4 is the birthday of William III. (1650), and also his wedding day with Mary (1677). November 5 is the anniversary of the discovery of the Gunpowder Plot (1605), and also of the landing of King William III. at Tor Bay. November 10 is the birthday of Martin Luther (1483) and of Dean Goode (1801), who has been called "the Modern Luther." November 12, Richard Baxter was born (1615). November 15, William Cowper was born (1731). November 17, Death of Queen Mary and accession of Queen Elizabeth (1558), called "Queen Elizabeth's Day" and observed with great demonstration from 1679 till the accession of George I. quieted the fears of the people as to the danger to the Protestant Succession to the Throne. November 23 Royal order, substituting tables for altars in churches (1550). November 24, John Knox died (1572). Archbishop Sancroft, the leader of the seven bishops, died (1693). November 29, the fall of Cardinal Wolsey, the enemy of the Reformation in England (1530)."

The Manchester Mission.

No more inspiring meetings are held during the year, in connection with the Wesleyan Church, than the annual gatherings of the Manchester Mission, which, under the able leadership of the Rev. S. F. Collier, has done so much to purify the life of the great Northern city. The functions on Tuesday of last week were no exception to the rule. While a storm raged without, great crowds gathered at noon in the Central Hall, and in the afternoon in the Free Trade Hall. In the evening the latter could not accommodate them, and an overflow meeting was held.

The year's report, which Mr. Collier presented, was a cheering recital of successful spiritual and philanthropic work. The outstanding feature of the operations was the continued and remarkable growth of the membership. For the sixth year in succession the Mission has furnished the largest increase in Methodism. There are now 3,301 full members, 974 on trial, and 937 in junior classes. Thus no fewer than 5,212 persons meet in Christian fellowship. By means of the Sunday services, 15,000 persons on an average hear the Gospel each Sunday, and as many more are reached during the week by house-to-house visitation, open-air services, meetings in lodging-houses and cottages, &c. Over 2,500 scholars attend the Sunday-schools.

A YEAR'S DEVELOPMENT.

The spiritual aspects of the work are ever kept in the forefront, as these figures show, but the philanthropic and social developments are also wonderful. In the men's home and casual ward during the year 27,034 beds have been provided, and 71,540 meals. Women and girls to the number of 4,492 have appealed to the Mission agents in their sin and destitution, and have been individually dealt with. Prison-gate work, maternity charity, girls' home, medical mission, men's labour yard, Sunday meals for destitute men—these are a few of the branches of the social work. The Homes and Shelters scheme is now practically completed, save in one particular—and that is, that £6,000 are required to free the buildings from debt. The ideal of the Mission is to touch the very lowest stratum in the social system, and never before have there been such repeated and striking instances of the power of the Gospel "to make the foullest clean."

The preacher at the midday service was Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., who delivered an impressive discourse from the words, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. iv. 4).

WOMEN'S WORK FOR WOMEN.

The afternoon meeting was as usual devoted to the consideration of work among women. The Free Trade Hall was crowded. Miss Keerney, a voluntary worker in connection with the Mission, presided. In the course of a brief address, she said that the staff, by its wonderful energy, sanctified ingenuity, and manifold branches, had really made the Manchester Mission to hundreds of people an embodied Providence.

Sister Marion related the story of a doctor who, having fallen through gambling, came under the influence of the Mission, and was helped from his state of destitution to a respectable position in society. The next speaker was Mrs. Burnett Smith (Annie S. Swan). The account of the Manchester Mission had often fired her imagination and heart. Such work furnished a wide and unexplored field for the energies, ambitions, and gifts of men and women. Those who are endowed with special gifts must not forget that they are intended for use to the glory of Him who gave them. Let women make the vow to live for the purifying and sweetening of life around them.

Sister Pattie, who has charge of the Women's Shelter, showed that this section of the institution is self-supporting. She was saddened by the drunkenness among young women, and said that nine out of every ten persons who came under her notice could in some way trace their downfall to drink.

The evening meeting was a notable gathering. Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., presided, and the Free Trade Hall was filled to overflowing. In the course of a vigorous address, the Chairman urged that, in supporting a great Evangelical Mission to the masses of the people, they were doing more than would be possible in any other way to regenerate society, to build up the power of the country, and to hand on to future ages conditions improved by the infusion of the Gospel. Betting and gambling, the housing of the working-classes, and the temperance problem demanded speedy attention.

Rev. Dr. Davison, president of the Wesleyan Conference, spoke of the Manchester Mission as the most successful and most spiritually fruitful work anywhere to be found. It was catholic in all its aims, and was the response of Methodism to the inarticulate cry of the city. In the midst of a dense and trackless forest a way is being made. One of the saddest phrases in human language is "an abandoned man or woman." Abandoned by whom? By society? That is very soon done. By friends? That is worse. By self? Worst of all. But abandoned by God—never!

Rev. J. H. Jowett followed with a stirring address, full of spiritual glow and fervour. At the close of the meeting it was found that £2,500 had been raised at this anniversary.

Abbey Road, St. John's Wood.

The Baptist Church at Abbey Road, St. John's Wood, N.W., has recently enjoyed a season of much blessing. Mr. W. R. Lane conducted evangelistic services, commencing November 5. In spite of fog and rain the people came. The strong Scriptural addresses of the evangelist were used of God to the blessing of many. The following week afternoon and evening services were held for the deepening of spiritual life, Colonel Morton, Captain Tottenham, Miss Bolton (Morocco), Messrs. Stanley Smith, W. B. Sloan, J. E. Mathieson, Revs. J. Gregory Mantle, F. B. Meyer, and G. C. Grubb conducting them. Rev. J. and Mrs. Collins, from Wendover, helped by singing the songs of Zion. Each day God graciously blessed the speakers and their messages. Wednesday, 15th, was the beginning of a deeper work of grace in many a heart. Rev. G. C. Grubb, after a long and stormy passage across the Channel, came, wearied in body, to the meeting in time to give the last address of that evening. Taking for his theme, "The Precious Blood of Jesus," he spoke with much power; a hush and stillness pervaded the assembly. There was an utter absence of anything like excitement, but the still small voice of God was heard; and throughout Thursday, when Mr. Meyer (afternoon) and Mr. Grubb (evening) spoke, the same Divine Presence was known.

The Evangelical Alliance.

The fifty-fifth Annual Conference of this Association of Evangelical Christians opened at Bournemouth on Tuesday, and continues until this (Thursday) evening. Members, delegates, and friends journeyed from London and all parts of the provinces in order to participate in the gatherings. The opening meeting was devoted entirely to supplicating Divine favour that God might be glorified in all the proceedings of the Conference. This meeting was held in Cairns House, and was followed by a social gathering in the Shaftesbury Hall, when addresses of welcome were given by the local clergy and ministers. The programme of the Conference embraces subjects of vital importance to the Christian Church of our time, and many will pray that deliberations of the assembly may be fruitful in strengthening the bonds of union and quickening the zeal and devotion of believers in every land.

Gospel Literature.—In connection with the work at Best Lane Mission Room, Canterbury, an appeal is made for Gospel Almanacs and Bibles for distribution, and for helpful books for the Sunday school. Address Mr. John Frote, Stationmaster, Bridge Station, Canterbury, Kent.

Military Convention.

The annual Military Convention, to which the president and committee of the Central Y.M.C.A. invite the members of the Soldiers' Christian Association, was held at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday of last week. Several hundred soldiers (in uniform), with their friends, attended, and the proceedings throughout the day were of a hearty character. The Association, which is an auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A., was organized some years ago for the purpose of carrying on Christian work in the British Army, both at home and abroad.

STILL AT THE FRONT.

The campaign in South Africa has naturally influenced the operations of the Society during the past two years. They have employed and are still employing workers in South Africa, and have erected over a score of tents and iron structures for the use of the soldiers as meeting places for religious services, and as reading and writing rooms. Writing materials are supplied free of charge, and over twelve tons of literature have been distributed. Up to the present time the Society have incurred an expense of £7,000 in the interests of our troops at the front. Happily they have received every facility for carrying on their useful and much-needed labours. The present Commander-in-Chief and his predecessor have both given their patronage to the Association, and letters from them were read on Wednesday expressing regret that they were unable to be present at the Convention.

Delegates representing branches of the Soldiers' Christian Association were present from all parts of the country, besides ladies from the various soldiers' homes, and a number of army Scripture readers and chaplains. The presence of nearly 100 officers was a striking testimony to the usefulness of the Association's work.

N.E. London Gospel Mission

The annual meeting of this mission was held on Tuesday in last week at Earlham Hall, Dalston. A large number of friends were present, including the principal workers at the outlying branches, and also those from the Homes of Rest at Lancing on Sea.

From a brief statement made by the Director and confirmed by the various helpers, it was apparent that a vast amount of good work has been done during the year, resulting in blessing to souls, as well as largely contributing to the comfort of the helpless and destitute. The three Homes of Rest on the South Coast, accommodating respectively men and youths, mothers and infants, and women and children, have been filled to overflowing all the season.

There has been a large new wing added to the Women's and Children's Home during the year, bringing the accommodation in this establishment to just 100 beds. The whole of the expenditure for both the London Mission as well as the "Homes" was included in the sum of £4,500, which, together with a small balance, represented the income from all sources.

Mr. Alexander H. Simmonds, one of the trustees of the Mission, presided. It is a point with this many-sided endeavour to bring its Samaritan-like work before its friends by filling the platform with its own workers, and listening to their deeply interesting stories, fresh from their scenes of toil and conflict in the London slums, or the happier surroundings of the sunny Southern shores.

The two sets of testimonies, like the alternating light and shade, were deeply interesting, while it was made fairly plain from the references given, that the Homes are valuable centres of evangelism, from which many an invalid returns whole in soul as well as body.

Communications should be addressed to the director, Mr. Wm. Chorley, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, London, N. The matrons would supply application forms at any time if addressed, the Homes of Rest, Lancing, Sussex.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

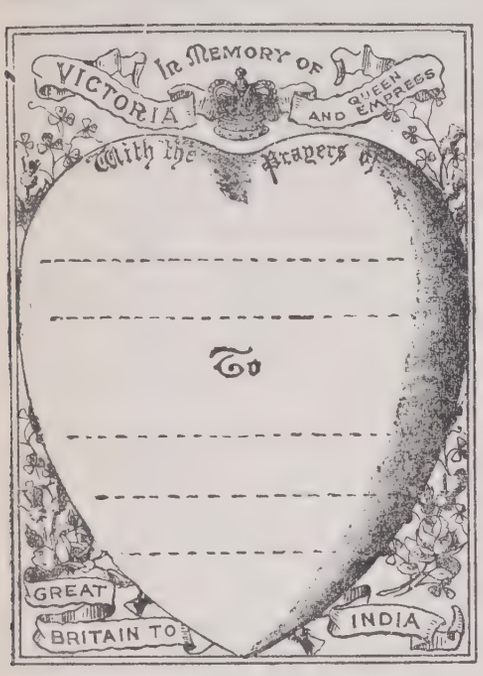
Scriptures for India.

LAST week I called your attention, in a "Personal" note, to the scheme for presenting a Bible, New Testament, or Gospel to each of the inhabitants of India who can read, and who is not already possessed of at least a portion of the Scriptures. If you asked your parents to explain the plan to you, you will know that at first the idea in the minds of the promoters was to provide only for children in this way; and, although it is hoped now to include the grown-up people as well, it is important for you to remember that the boys and girls were first in the thoughts of all. But as grown-up people are taking a special interest in the men and women of India, there is a special call on the boys and girls of our Christian homes to pray and give for their darker-skinned little brothers and sisters.



Many of you will find it hard to understand that there can be young people able to read, and interested in the Gospel story, who are yet too poor to possess the sacred volume. If you were told how much the books were sold at, and what the prices are equal to in English money, you would think they could not be made lower without being given away altogether. But many men in India are not able to earn as much as 2s. a week, and every coin is required to feed and clothe the bodies of himself and his family. In too many cases cold and hunger cannot be kept away even in ordinary times; and during the famines of the last three years, millions of people have been compelled to see their children suffer from actual want, in spite of every effort they could put forth.

Most of you have, I am sure, contributed to the various famine funds that have been raised throughout the country; and I want to show you how you can do something also to relieve this famine of the Bread of Life. The cost of giving a Gospel is 2d., of a New Testament 1s., and of a Bible 5s. The majority of Gospels must be given in the native languages of India, but I think you will be specially interested in young people who read and speak English like ourselves.

A beautiful English Bible has been prepared, with references, as described for older readers of The Christian last week (page 13); and I think it very likely that a number of my young friends, who love the Word of God themselves, may wish to give 5s. in order that some boy or girl just leaving school shall be furnished with such a Bible. But for the larger number who can only spare 1s., there is a New Testament with good, clear print, also very nicely bound in red leather (because, you know, the people like bright colours), with round corners, edges red under gold. Either of these books would be an excellent Christmas gift, which could be sent in the Name of the Lord Jesus to one of those whom He loves in India.

You probably know already that one object in view has been to commemorate the reign of our good Queen Victoria, and a gold stamp will be put on the outside of each volume to show this. We gave last week a fac-simile of the stamp used for the Bibles, and I have now pleasure in showing what is being put on the New Testament. The people of India loved Queen Victoria as much as we did, and this can be made a strong link between them and ourselves.

If those who are willing to join in this effort will send me postal orders for the amount they are able to give, I will send in return labels (of which I also give you a copy), which will be pasted inside the covers of the books. On each of these the giver is asked to write his or her name and address in the upper part. When the book is given away the missionary doing so will add the name and address of the receiver underneath, and thus the gift will be quite personal from one of my readers to a definite individual in India. An intimation will be added that the receiver is invited to correspond with the giver.

You will see from all this that you have here an opportunity of taking a practical part in the work of making the Lord Jesus Christ known in India. I hope every one of you will pray regularly for a blessing on the books you send, and that some at least will have the joy of entering into direct correspondence with boys and girls in India whom you may be able to help into the knowledge of the truth.

One word I must say about time. It is desirable that all Bibles and Testaments should be in the hands of the missionary friends in India not later than December 31, in order that the distribution may begin on the following day. To make this possible those in English must be sent off in a few days. So you will see there is no time to be lost, and it will help greatly if you will communicate with me during the next week.

If any of you who live in or near London would like to see sample copies of the books, they will be shown to you on calling at Messrs. Morgan and Scott's showroom, 30, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, December 1.

Children of God (Rom. viii. 14-17).

ALL men are children of God in the general sense in which the Apostle Paul used the term on Mars Hill (Acts xvii. 29). But only those who believe in the Son of God, and receive him into their hearts have the right to call themselves the sons of God in the unique way in which the Apostle used the word (John i. 12). Then because we are sons God sends forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts crying "Abba Father" (Gal. iv. 6, 7).

It is very important for us to bear this in mind. There is a tendency in the present age to say that all men are equally the children of God. A notion of this kind, which has no basis in the Word of God, does away with the necessity of regeneration. I do not think that men are born into the world children of the devil; but they certainly by nature are deficient of the life of God, which makes them sons, and that life is only imparted when the Holy Spirit brings the germ of eternal life into our hearts.

We may not always know the time when we were born again. The process of spiritual birth may be as much a matter of unconsciousness to us as our natural birth, but in the history of all true souls who enter the Kingdom of God there must be a definite moment when they are born, not of blood nor of the will of the flesh, but of God.

I sometimes think that the counterpart of regeneration takes place in those who reject Christ. They are born into the kingdom of darkness, they receive the seed of the devil into their natures, and become his children. Hence we are told, "In this the children of God are manifested and the children of the devil," an echo of the words of Him whose pitying tenderness sometimes clothed itself in sharpest words, as when He said, "If God were your Father ye would love Me"; "Ye are of your Father the devil." Young soul, stay here for a moment and ask yourself if you have received the Son of God, and have become a son; if you have received the Spirit of adoption, and have become a child? If not, kneel at the foot of the cross, or better, before the living Christ, and as you fix your heart's desire on Him, and hunger and thirst, the Spirit of God will do his marvellous work of regenerating grace, and you will be born of the Spirit.

The test of being a child consists not in remembering the moment of the new birth, nor in looking within for evidences, but by marking well the suggestions of this paragraph. (1) The child of God is led by the Spirit. He is growingly conscious of an inner light, an inner voice. He does not judge after the sight of the eyes, but meekly asks what God would have him do. He is sensible of a gracious influence pervading his nature, and illuminating him in the way which God would have him take. (2) He is no longer under the spirit of bondage. The sense that he must, is replaced by the desire that he may. He is not always driven by the fear of the slave, who dreads his master's wrath and rod unless he acts in a particular manner. The twice-born soul enters into the spirit of the Father's will, and acts because it loves. (3) There is the witness of the Spirit. Mark the words, "the Spirit beareth witness with our spirit." It is not so much a revelation made to us as a revelation made in us and with us. We must not think that there shall rise up in the believer's heart, from an origin beyond his nature, a voice with which he has nothing to do. It is rather a consciousness working through our nature that God is our Father, not so much that we are his children as that God loves us as his children. A sweet and holy sense of God's infinite fatherliness steals over the soul, and amid the storms and shocks of life it shelters itself in the knowledge that the Infinite One loves and cares.

As children, we are heirs, that is, we may lay claim to all our Father's possessions. He gives Himself and all He has to us in Jesus. He says to us, as in our Lord's parable, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine" (Luke xv. 31). Happy is the soul that realises its inheritance and makes use of it, and knows that it can never come to penury, because the everlasting wealth of God stands between it, and every demand that can be made. Christ and you share together in sufferings here, for if the Son were rejected, surely the sons must be, and the glory hereafter, which is guaranteed to us by our covenant, which cannot be set aside. C.E. NOTES.

Kentucky Endeavourers are preparing 2,000 Christmas letters for the inmates of the State prisons.

A letter has been received from Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., stating that he has every hope of being able to accept the invitation of the National Council, to be present at the National Convention next Whitsuntide. As this will be a "Coming of Age" Convention, it is fitting that the founder of the Movement should be present.

International S.S. Lesson.

Moses and Pharaoh (Ex. xi. 1-10).

Golden Text: Isa. lxiii. 9).

Connective Story.

AGAIN we have an interval and many events between our last and this lesson. Probably about a year has elapsed, and we now find Moses in Zoan, and have the record of part of his last interview with Pharaoh, the son of Rameses II. It will be best to sketch the story of Moses' fears; of the signs God gave him power to perform, to prove to the people that he was sent by the God of their fathers; of the helper provided for him in Aaron; how they go together to the people and to Pharaoh; how Pharaoh defied Jehovah, and the consequences.

Pharaoh's Hardened
Almighty Power of God.

Verses 1-3.

This is a parenthesis, telling us what God had revealed to Moses previously, so that when the time came for the departure, the people would be ready. The final stroke would be so severe that the king would "let you go altogether and utterly thrust you out hence," which is the correct translation. (2) The word "borrow" should be "ask." The terror-stricken Egyptians willingly loaded them with costly garments and jewels, praying them to go (xii. 35, 36). There were about 2,400,000 people, and we read how the spoils they took with them were used in the wilderness (Exo. xxxii. 2; xxxv. 22-24. Refer to Gen. xv. 14; Psa. cv. 37; Ezek. xxxix. 10).

Moses, 3.

He had proved himself to be "very great," not only to his own people, but to their enemies. Greater than all the magicians, the power of God with him, was felt. He was great in learning, and mighty in deeds (Acts vii. 22). Great in his decision for God (Heb. xi. 25). Great in communion with God (Num. xii. 7, 8). Great in wisdom and patience and meekness (Ex. xxxii. 32, 33).

Last Words to Pharaoh, 4-8.

Connect v. 4 with 29 in the last chapter. The exact night is not named. Jehovah Himself is coming to execute his last judgment. God alone, who gives life, can destroy life, or command its destruction. 5. In Egypt the law of primogeniture prevailed, hence the terribleness of this judgment. Rank or poverty made no exception. Grinding was heavy, irksome work, rotating one heavy millstone upon another by means of a handle, generally done by slaves, or captives (Judges xvi. 21; Isa. xlvii. 1, 2). The Egyptians kept pet and sacred animals; their death greatly added to the trouble. The Orientals give passionate utterance to their grief. We can scarcely conceive the noise there would be on this occasion. The nuisance of dogs prowling about, hideously howling at passers by, is known in Egypt specially, hence the force of the contrast. The proud nobles standing around Pharaoh's throne would all be humbled, terror would bring them to their knees (Isa. xlv. 23; Phil. ii. 10). Moses' anger was righteous indignation at the dishonour done to God (Mark iii. 5; Eph. iv. 26).

The Plagues, 9, 10.

The Lord had forewarned Moses that Pharaoh would pay no heed to Him, now He is coming Himself to the man who defied Him (Ex. iii. 19, 20). The reason is given in Ex. vii. 4, 5. If Pharaoh had let the people go at first, God's greatness and power would not have been exhibited. Pharaoh hardened his own heart to begin with, determined he would not believe in spite of all proofs, so God gave him over, and permitted his heart to grow harder and harder (Rom. i. 28). Verse 10 is a retrospective summary of the series of nine plagues. Recall them to the minds of the scholars, and point out how each plague increased in severity, and all struck at national idolatry and superstition.

Temperance Notes.

IN the growing London suburb of Seven Kings, Essex, 1,500 residents petitioned for, and 2,056 against, a hotel licence, with the result that it was refused confirmation.

In the Queen's County there are, according to a letter to the Leinster Express, from Sir Algernon Coote, Bart., 182 licensed houses to a population of 12,453. There were in the year 1900 a total of 2,781 convictions, of which number there were 1,691 for drunkenness.

In connection with the anniversary meetings of the Keighley Gospel Temperance Society held recently, Mr. Bob Johnson rendered good service, speaking impressively to the unsaved, and telling the story of his conversion. Mr. Johnson also visited the fair grounds and distributed religious periodicals among the showmen.

The City Chief Commissioner of Police has declined to renew the exemption order to Fleet Street publicans permitting them to remain open after hours for the convenience of newspaper employées. It is said that the cause of temperance will not be promoted, as nearly all the men affected will join a club, with a small subscription, which has already been projected.

In pursuance of the recent order of Sir John Woodburn, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, prohibiting the employment of European barmaids in Calcutta, the Board of Revenue has ruled that the following condition shall be inserted in every licence in Bengal, whether held by European or native: "That in the place for which this licence is granted no female shall be employed in connection with imported wines or spirituous or fermented liquors in any capacity whatsoever."

Several important subjects were dealt with at the yearly conference of the Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperance Union held at Hull a few days ago. Many encouraging reports of women's labours were given. The rescue work at the High Platts Sanatorium and the new home in Sheffield is lovingly carried on, and is being abundantly blessed and owned of God. Dr. Sarah Gray's paper dealt with the effects of alcohol upon young children, and that of Mrs. Armitage (Rawdon) on "Public-house Reform," while Mrs. Amy Hicks spoke with much earnestness on the question of "Barmaids."

The twenty-fifth annual meeting of Lambeth Band of Hope Union was held recently in Peckham Rye Tabernacle. Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., President of the Union, took the chair. Mr. C. Wakeley encouraged the workers still to labour earnestly for their important cause. Rev. Frank Smith, of Denmark Place Chapel, dealt with the woeful army of half a million drunkards in this country, and vigorously called upon the Christian Church to bestir herself and sever all connection with the traffic which causes such evil. Mr. C. W. Garrard, of Hackney, showed how the Children's Bill would help on the Band of Hope cause.

The Bishop of Liverpool, in recommending the clergy to bring before the people the claims of the Diocesan Temperance Society, says: "The need for temperance work conducted on wise and sober and patient lines is increasingly felt. The public conscience is becoming more and more awakened to the guilt, the shame, and the misery of the sin of drunkenness. On all sides judges, magistrates, members of Parliament, coroners, medical men, and ministers of religion, are lifting up their voice against it. . . . The evil can only be combated by a strong and united effort and by the whole Church rising up in God's name to rescue men and women who are slaves of strong drink, to strengthen the feeble-hearted, and to train the young from their earliest age in habits of temperance."

Spitalfields' Lodging Houses.—The annual report of the Spitalfields' Lodging House Band marks the completion of twelve years' continuous endeavour in a work beset with many difficulties. Those who seek the shelter of a lodging house comprise many who have lived on a much higher scale. The criminal often hides here from the law, as well as the merchant or clerk who, through dishonesty or drunkenness, has lost character and position; but others are artisans who, through lack of work, have to make these resorts their home. Sabbath and week-night meetings, open-air services, free breakfasts and teas, are regularly conducted, and many are the cases in which timely aid and the message of the Gospel have far-reaching results. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. D. Wilson, 11, Vere Street, W.

Y.W.C.A. Week of Prayer.

THE Week of Prayer—November 10-16—was one of unusual interest at the Y.W.C.A. headquarters, as the British National Committee had arranged a series of morning meetings in Morley Hall, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W., to welcome home some of their workers from distant lands. Several of the nine National Y.W.C.A. organizations were represented, as well as isolated branches.

Miss Reynolds spoke on the need of extending Y.W.C.A. in China and Japan, lands which she has just visited in her capacity of general secretary of the World's Y.W.C.A. Her words excited much interest, and made the World's Committee desire to send out speedily workers to these important fields. There is variety in the talents required, as there is the student field, the factory field, and the English-speaking population.

Miss Daw, from the Calcutta Y.W.C.A., told of the spread of the work amohg the Bengalee Christian women. Owing to the customs of the country, some are still unable to join in religious services, and find the Y.W.C.A. notes on the monthly subject (are now translated into seven Indian languages) of the greatest use in teaching them how to study the Bible, and in helping them to a Christian life.

Mr. Dovey, hon. sec. of the Committee of Selection, late member of Committee in Sydney, described the extension of work in the colonies; a united Conference has been held, and an interchange of secretaries effected.

Another object effected by these meetings was to bring together the heads of the British departments, and a meeting of great interest was one in which a representative of each of the twenty departments brought before the audience in one sentence the special need in her work; sometimes it was the separate position of girls such as those helped by the Blind Department, or the Deaf Department, or the Juniors. At other times it was Temperance, Sick Aid, or the Loving Service League. Intercession was made for each, in silence, or audibly.

But the object, or rather, place, that excited most earnest prayer and immediate gifts, was Alexandria, in Egypt. During the past five years various ladies have gone for a winter's work, but none held the fort till Miss Rose Johnson was called to the work. She related how she was led into the work from the desert, and how God had signally shown his approval of the step by leading her on to take a second flat; often there is no bed left for the workers because of the number of applications, girls of all nationalities finding themselves alone in Alexandria, and needing the safe shelter of a home. She went on to tell of the happy Christian influence of the Home, and of the interest the members are beginning to take. As she spoke of the constant want of room, every heart responded to her appeal for £12,000 to secure a suitable Home.

Praise occupied an important part of the daily programme, and the hearts of many were encouraged as they heard of "little ones becoming a thousand"; and the picture of the Bombay Y.W.C.A. building—complete and furnished—was an additional subject for praise.

Before the week was over, a very definite answer to prayer was received from Alexandria, the Committee on Thursday having made itself responsible for £250 per annum, on Saturday, unexpectedly, the first £50 was received. The evening meetings, in which West-End members took part, were equally interesting. E. K.

An Effective Tract.—Another testimony, in addition to the many already given to the wonderful power of a well-known tract, has been received from a pastor in Michigan, who writes:—"Some years ago you kindly sent me a donation of about two dozen copies of the booklet 'Come to Jesus,' by Newman Hall. I gave them to persons in my parish who seemed thoughtful as to their personal salvation, and in almost every instance the person receiving it is now a professed follower of Christ. I know of no book that can so successfully win souls to the Saviour. It was blessed to my conversion."—American Messenger (New York).

Irish Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THIS week is being observed as a special week of prayer on behalf of Foreign Missions by all the Irish Presbyterian churches, and the Presbytery of Belfast has arranged for a great change of pulpits next Sunday, when special sermons on Foreign Missions will be preached in all Presbyterian churches in Belfast and the neighbourhood.

Under the auspices of the Irish Women's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. J. K. Barney, of the U.S.A., has been addressing temperance meetings at Cork, Dublin, Wexford, and various other centres. At present the Roman Catholic priests are taking up heartily the temperance question in various parts of the country, and in some of their publications they have been urging forward the cause of abstinence. In Wexford several of them attended the licensing sessions in opposition to the granting of new licences, and the County Court judge commended their action and thanked them for their attendance. This is certainly a new and hopeful feature in the history of Ireland.

The Royal Commission on Irish university education has been sitting in Dublin, and several witnesses have been examined before it. Among these have been Dr. O'Dwyer, Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick; Rev. Dr. Hamilton, president of Queen's College, Belfast; Rev. Dr. Nicholas, president of the Methodist College, Belfast, and others. The witnesses did not agree among themselves. Dr. O'Dwyer wanted a Roman Catholic University established in Dublin, Dr. Hamilton was in favour of the establishment of a Roman Catholic College, and Dr. Nicholas was not in favour of either one or the other. Amongst this babel of voices it is difficult for the Government to know what is best to be done; but one thing is certain—that the Roman Catholic hierarchy have set their hearts upon obtaining a new form of endowment in the shape of a university, after the model of that at Louvain, in Belgium, and costing the nation a million of money, and £30,000 a year afterwards for working expenses. It remains, however, to be seen, whether or not the country will acquiesce in any such retrograde legislation.

Scottish Notes.

THE extent of the need for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is shown by the fact that 346 such cases were dealt with in Scotland during October.

On account of the decreases during recent years in the membership of Y.M.C.A.'s the National Council has invited Mr. W. M. Oatts to undertake a special campaign among the young men in some of the districts of Scotland. The long and varied experience gained by Mr. Oatts during his protracted tenure of the Glasgow secretaryship, and on his recent tour round the world in Y.M.C.A. interests, will lend weight to his counsel to declining associations.

In the report presented recently at the annual meeting of the Dundee Charity Organization Society, the belief was expressed that by the efforts of the Society indiscriminate alms-giving had been considerably reduced, while professional beggars and impostors had had their business seriously interfered with. It was, however, admitted that it would be incorrect to conclude that begging on the street and from house to house had ceased to exist, for so long as well-meaning but thoughtless people gave their money to beggars of whom they knew nothing, merely because it was easier to give than to refuse, just so long would this class continue to flourish and make a good living out of the weakness of others. The often-made statement was repeated that if such givers would put aside even the small coins with which they so thoughtlessly confirmed the beggar in his begging, and would use them to help even one deserving family in distress, they would not only be doing good, but avoiding evil.

The forty-third annual meeting of the Edinburgh Society for Teaching the Blind to read at their own Homes, held a few days ago, took the form of a treat to the objects of the Society's care, who were present to the number of about 200—mostly elderly men and women. Each had a guide, and the audience also included about 150 ladies and gentlemen interested in the work. Bailie Brown occupied the chair. The annual report, submitted by Mr. James M'Kerrell Brown, C.A., set forth that the usual work of the Society had been vigorously carried on. The Library now contains about 2,500 volumes. One deaf and partially blind man had read eighty-seven volumes, while a country reader had perused seventy-seven. A sum of £43 had been spent in supplying needy blind with coals. The number on the roll of the Society a year ago was 427; forty-four had been since discovered; twenty-two had died; thirteen had removed to other districts, and one had sight restored—leaving 435 on the roll, 188 male and 247 female.

The annual conversazione of the workers of the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society, held last Thursday, was a large and enthusiastic gathering. Lord Provost Chisholm (chairman), recalling his long connection with the society, said it was very many years since he, a humble and obscure member, joined the ranks of the society, and became familiar, by personal participation, with the numerous details of the various departments of the work of the society. There were in Glasgow many thousands of growing lads and young women who were outside the touch of existing religious organizations, and for whose souls no man nor woman seemed to care. They lounged about the streets or strolled along the country roads on the Sabbath Day, which was to them a day of utter weariness and unrelieved gloom. The Foundry Boys' Society had endeavoured to lay hold of these classes. There were now seventy or eighty branches, but he was afraid that the need of the city was as great as ever.

Welsh Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

SINCE its formation a few years ago the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Ministers' Prayer Union has thade steady progress. According to the last report me membership stands at 436. Some of the meetings of the Union have been fruitful in blessing to those attending them.

The annual report of the East Glamorgan Welsh Congregational Union shows a membership of 14,181, the number of churches is eighty-one. The Sunday schools show an attendance of 16,860, an increase of 335. The collections towards church purpose amounted to £23,312 16s. 2d. The average contributions of the members was nearly 2s. 6d. higher than the previous year.

Some months ago we announced that a memorial was to be erected near Wrexham to the memory of Morgan Llwyd, the great Welsh mystic. An edition of some of his works was published some two or three years ago under the editorship of the late Mr. T. Ellis, M.P. The statement is now made that another volume is to be published. It is to be hoped that this is true, for the devotional element in Welsh religious literature is conspicuously absent.

The annual meeting of the Welsh Free Church Council of Swansea was held on November 13 and 14. At the afternoon conference on Thursday, a valuable paper was read by Rev. G. Penar Griffiths, Pentre, on "Religion and the Home." In the evening a public meeting was held, when Rev. Barrow Williams, of Llandudno, spoke on the "Foundations of Nonconformity." These he declared to be four in number: One God, one Bible, one Spirit, and one Priest. The concluding address was by Rev. H. Hughes, Abergele, and dealt with "The Mission of Nonconformity to the Twentieth Century."

Cambridge Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE University Church Missionary Union was addressed on November 15 by Mr. Eugene Stock, Editorial Secretary of the C.M.S., and on November 22 by Dr. Cook, of Uganda. The Principal of Ridley Hall (Rev. T. W. Drury) succeeds the Bishop of Durham as President of the Union.

The Inter-Collegiate Christian Union was addressed on November 10 by Rev. R. C. Joynt. Last Sunday, Rev. F. B. Meyer was busy speaking, in addition to the two meetings of the Union, at Emmanuel Congregation Church in the morning, and at the Railway Mission in the afternoon.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference was in Cambridge last Sunday, and preached at the Hills Road Chapel, and in the evening, before a very large congregation, at the Hobson Street Chapel. On the following day a public meeting was held in connection with Wesleyan Missions, when addresses were given by Rev. T. J. Choate and Rev. C. H. Hocken (formerly of Cambridge).

Rev. Charles Joseph, at the autumnal meetings of the Cambridge Baptist Association, read a paper on "The Minister's Responsibility for Conversion," which was really an answer to a question addressed to the speaker, "Ought a preacher to be satisfied to preach without conversions?" Mr. Joseph volunteered no general answer, but he went into some considerations suggested by the question, and finally reminded his hearers that faithful labour could not be in vain.

A Temperance Army.—All those who are interested in the moral and spiritual welfare of our soldiers will rejoice over the report for 1900-1 of the Army Temperance Association in India. It appears that one-third of the British troops in that country are total abstainers, the average number during the period dealt with in the report being 23,505. Detailed figures in regard to seven regiments show conclusively that in India, as elsewhere, total abstinence is conducive to health.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Charles Inglis at Walsall.

A MISSION has been held at Walsall by Mr. CHARLES INGLIS, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., with which much blessing was given on a former visit. Large numbers have heard the Word in the different chapels, especially on Sundays, no fewer than four services having been held on each Lord's Day. The afternoon Bible readings have proved a source of blessing to the members of the various denominations, while the "old, old story" has brought rest to the weary hearts. One cheering feature has been to see some who were brought to Christ in the previous mission now devoted servants in God's work.

Mr. P. R. Hurditch at Bristol.

A ten days' mission has been conducted in the John Millard Memorial Chapel, Bristol, by Mr. P. RUSSELL HURDITCH. There was much preparation of heart by the members of the church; weekly united prayer meetings were held, every house in the neighbourhood was visited, and a personal invitation was given to all with whom the workers came in contact to attend the services. During the mission numbers of friends paraded the streets with large bills raised on poles, and held open-air services prior to the commencement of the meetings.

Difficulty was experienced at the commencement in getting the right people inside, under the sound of the Gospel, but the meetings, night by night, increased in numbers and interest. On the last Sunday the church was full, and large numbers remained to the after meeting. The addresses throughout have been very helpful, and have been marked by spiritual intensity. We are able to record that many have definitely decided to follow Christ. In addition to the service for adults, meetings for children were held on the Sunday afternoons. E. WILKINS.

The Weaver Brothers at Wisbech.

A two weeks' mission has been concluded at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Wisbech, by the Brothers WEAVER. We are devoutly thankful for the results. Three services were held on each Sabbath, when, particularly at night, all the available space of the commodious building was crowded, and still numbers were unable to gain admission.

In the afternoons, Bible talks were given and, prior to the evening services, prayer-meetings were held. A meeting for men was held on the second Sunday afternoon, and in preparation for this our young men workers had, on Saturday night, visited all the public-houses of the town, distributing tickets of invitation. This method brought together a motley crowd, largely of a class seldom seen in places of worship. The service made a marked impression, several of the men being led to attend the subsequent gatherings. A large number of churches were represented in the attendances, and several of them share in the harvest that was garnered. About eighty names of seekers were taken, a goodly proportion of whom were publicly welcomed into our church last Lord's Day evening. Others have given in their names as already associated with another congregation, while some of our village societies will also reap good results. One of our members, in gratitude for the mission, spontaneously offered to give £20 towards the expense of a similar effort next year.

A. W. EDWARDS, Primitive Methodist Minister.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Ryde, I.W.

An interesting and inspiring mission has just been conducted by Mr. W. R. LANE in the town of Ryde, I.W., under the auspices of the local Free Church Council. The Nonconformist Churches of the town joined most heartily in the work; and the Y.M.C.A. also made the mission a very important part of their programme. It was soon found that the visit of the missioner was awakening interest in the town and district, so that the spacious halls secured for the work were barely sufficient at times for the crowds who thronged to hear the Word.

A capital men's meeting in the Congregational Church, on Sunday, November 10, was the beginning of the good work. A still larger one was held in the Town Hall on the following Sunday, when Mr. Lane spoke earnestly and searchingly on "Purity." The members of the large P.S.A., which meets in the Congregational Church, under the leadership of Rev. H. Coley, took an active part in making these men's meetings so fruitful.

With the exception of three evenings, when the gatherings had to be held in the Congregational Church, all the services were held in the Ryde Town Hall. It would scarcely be correct to say that the non-church going public were present in any great numbers. Yet, amid the throng of Christian worshippers, who gathered as though it were a mission specially to them, there were many of the class we aimed at reaching. This was specially the case during the latter days of the Mission, when the lantern lecture on Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" and the story of his conversion enabled Mr. LANE to drive home his message with excellent effect. H. C.

Queen's Cross U.F. Church, Glasgow.

For some years a territorial mission was carried on in premises in Doncaster Street, in the north-west of the city, under the auspices of St. Matthew's United Free Church (Rev. James Stalker, D.D.) Some time ago the mission was raised to a charge under the title of Queen's Cross United Free Church, and Rev. GEORGE SINCLAIR, of Broxburn, called to it. The congregation has recently held its first evangelistic mission, the services continuing from Sabbath, October 27, till Sabbath, November 17, inclusive. During the first week the preacher was Rev. THOMAS CURRIE (Clapham Road Presbyterian Church, London), and Mr. HARRY YOUNG, evangelist, took charge during the other two weeks of the mission. Such work is not new to Mr. Currie, as in his student days he did work as an evangelist one summer in connection with the Ayrshire Christian Union, being largely blessed in it.

The mission at Queen's Cross has been fruitful in result, precious souls having been led out of the darkness of unbelief into the light of the Gospel of Christ. One man, Unitarian once on a time, but away from that creed now, though not yet in the kingdom, proved useful in bringing a number of men to the services. On the Friday night previous to the closing Sabbath he brought no less than ten men with him, and on the closing night he waited for the evangelist and said: "I have good news. Five of the ten men I brought have decided for Christ." He seemed to have conceived a liking for the evangelist, for he said: "Go on, and prosper. I am not on your side yet, but I am fighting my way. My head is logical, but my heart is Evangelical." "What church do you go to?" he was asked. "Oh! I go to none." It was suggested that he should look out for, and sit down under, some good man, that in this way it might come all right with him. "Oh! it will all come right yet," he said.

In connection with the mission, good work was done by the minister of the church in the matter of visitation. Day by day the calling upon people in their homes was earnestly undertaken and lovingly gone about. J. C.

Canon Hay Aitken at Peel, I.O.M.

As stated in last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN, the mission recently held in the rural deanery of Peel, Isle of Man, was of an encouraging character. Canon Aitken was the principal missioner at the new parish church of Peel, a beautiful structure, raised, to a large extent, by the labours of the late Bishop Rowley Hill, and by him designed to be the cathedral of the diocese, a project that was never carried out.

The good bishop would have felt amply rewarded for all his pains, if he could have witnessed the stirring scenes of the mission fortnight. It was an interesting circumstance that the late Mr. Robert Aitken, of Pendeen, Canon Aitken's honoured father, began his evangelizing work in that quaint old town, at a meeting mainly composed of fishermen, and with a Cornish fisherman for his teacher. Canon Aitken referred to this at a very interesting meeting for the fishermen, which he held on the last Friday of the mission. There is a painted glass window in the church, which bears an inscription that is probably unique: "In memory of Robert Aitken, evangelist."

At first the people seemed somewhat slow to move, and the mission had gone on for some days before there were signs of real ingathering. Then the work began in earnest, and extended greatly during the second week. Night by night anxious souls were invited to meet the missioners in the choir vestry which opened into the church, but was curtained off. Sometimes there would be about a score and sometimes only a dozen of these seeking ones, but the number altogether must have been very considerable.

About 300 memorial cards were distributed, and about two hundred persons had professed to yield themselves to Christ during the mission. The rest had been believers before, but seemed to have been distinctly helped during the mission. Mr. Stephens, who was assistant missioner, had large and attentive gatherings of children daily, the day school teachers throwing themselves very heartily into the work. Numbers of these little ones seemed anxious to dedicate their young lives to the Lord.

Miss Fort held meetings for women, which were much appreciated, and many owe their blessing under God to her simple and tender appeals. The mission ended on Monday, the 11th, when, in spite of a wet night, a very large gathering assembled, and the distribution of memorial cards continued till 11 p.m., although Canon Aitken had been distributing them privately for eight days previously.

In the district of St. John's, excellent work was done by Rev. F. HART, rector of Kimberley, Notts., whose earnest pleadings evidently produced a marked effect, and it is believed that there were a good many very definite cases of decision for Christ. At Kirk Michael, where, as in Peel, the mission lasted for a fortnight, and Rev. J. NUNN, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, was missioner, a very remarkable work of grace took place, which has greatly cheered the heart of the vicar and his helpers.

Up in the Foxdale district, Rev. A. G. WHALEY was at work among the miners, and with many signs of increasing interest, while at Ballaugh the mission began later, Mr. Stephens going on there immediately after the close of the services in Peel. At Crouk-y-Voddy, Mr. Bolton, of Liverpool, was the missioner, at Dalby, Rev. C. Lea Wilson, of Nottingham; and at Patrick, Rev. J. M. Spicer, vicar of Malew, Isle of Man. There seems every reason for profound gratitude for the impression made by this general mission.

Mr. WILLIAM FORBES, who has been giving addresses in various towns in South Wales, preached on Tuesday last in three chapels in Pembroke. He is now conducting a Pledge Crusade Mission in the Town Hall, Pembroke.

A fruitful mission has been held in the Wesleyan Church at Galphay, Ripon circuit, by Miss WADDINGTON (formerly of the "Joyful News" Mission). The speaker's words were used to impress the unconverted, and also to the blessing of the church.

Mr. SANKEY has been addressing large audiences at Springfield, Mass. Under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., the Court Square Theatre was engaged, where, on a Sunday afternoon, a splendid audience of 1,000 welcomed the renowned evangelist.

Mr. R. S. BRADBROOK, of London, has just concluded a six-days' mission for the Christian Endeavour Society connected with the Alfreton Congregational Church. He has sung and preached the Word with power. J. FRANKLAND, Pastor.

We regret to learn that Mr. JOHN ELLIOTT, of Torquay, who has for over twenty years rendered devoted service to the Gospel cause as an evangelist, is suffering from a painful malady, and is ordered complete rest. Mr. Elliott, writing from 19, Melville Street, Torquay, says:—"This has come as a sudden surprise to me, but I am at peace, knowing Romans viii. 28 is true. I shall value prayer."

Mr. SAMUEL LEVERMORE has conducted a fortnight's mission at Falcon Grove Hall, Battersea. The services, which terminated on Friday, November 15, were blessed and owned of God. The power of the Holy Spirit was felt at all the meetings, and, although, owing doubtless in a large measure to inclement weather, the attendances were not so great as was wished, yet many souls were, we believe, brought to the Lord, several of the cases being very bright, and the hearts of the Lord's people in this assembly were cheered. F. T.

Rev. A. ALLAN (late of Johannesburg), has just concluded a mission in Belfast in connection with the Y.M.C.A. of that city. The work extended over eight days, and the meetings were well attended throughout. On Sundays the large hall, which seats 1,750, was completely filled at the three o'clock service. Mr. Allan is a teacher of ripe experience and of insight into the Word of God. His addresses were much appreciated. The afternoon Bible readings, held daily for one hour, attracted numbers of business men, who appeared deeply interested. In answer to Mr. Allan's earnest appeals for a full consecration, there were, on several occasions, remarkable responses. Following the late mission of Rev. C. H. Yatman, which was conducted by the same association as a purely evangelistic effort, the mission just concluded by Mr. Allan proved most timely, as the young converts received valuable teaching.

Requests for Prayer.

For a mission being conducted by Rev. Jesse Mayo, at Marlborough, Wilts.

For a mission at Knoddishall, Saxmundham, December 1-16, by Rev. Dr. Morris.

For services at Horeb English Baptist Chapel, Nantymoel, Glam., December 2-8, by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, Mon.

For an eight-days' mission in Shaftesbury Hall, Deptford, December 1-8, to be conducted by Mr. Henry Hull, late R.H.A., and some soldiers.

Praise.

For blessing as the result of Messrs. Montgomery and Leafe's Men's Mission in the City of Dublin Y.M.C.A.

About Books.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

AMONG the many varied and attractive features of Good Words for 1901 (7s. 6d. Isbister & Co.), a leading place is claimed by the Sunday Readings in St. Paul's Epistles, by Rev. George Jackson. The "missionary" papers deal with some of the hardest problems of social life, and point out the way in which they are being solved. Mr. William Canton's literary notes, "From One Point of View," have helped many readers to keep abreast of the publishing world. Travel and science papers abound with interest, and the poetical contributions are on as high a level as ever. Special pains have been taken in the selection and preparation of illustrations, with the most satisfactory result. This volume is especially strong in the contemporary biography of men and women concerning whom we all desire to know something.

Dr. John Watson's papers on "Respectable Sins" will attract readers for The Sunday Magazine volume (7s. 6d. Isbister & Co.), though many other writers have also combined to make it an excellent compilation of family reading. The principal story is "The Winds of Cathrigg," by Christabel Coleridge; and there is an abundance of those shorter stories which find widespread favour. Mr. F. D. How, in "Noble Women of Our Time," has given us short, readable biographies of twelve women whom the world should never forget. Five leading writers have recalled for our benefit the state of affairs when they "were young." Among descriptive writing, "Pictures from Indian Mission Fields," by Rev. Dr. James Wells, combine information and pleasant writing to a notable degree. A novel feature in the well-furnished illustration department is "Curiosities of the Camera." Altogether, this is a book fitted to bring pleasure to all the members of a home-circle, however varied their ages or circumstances.

STORY BOOKS.

Nelson & Sons.

Several stirring scenes of soldier life are described in The Queen's Shilling, by Geraldine Glasgow (1s.), accompanied by a story of temptation, yielded to at first, but trodden under foot in the end.

A more stirring boy's book will be found in A Lad of Devon, by Mrs. Henry Clarke (1s.), wherein a boy from London is introduced to country life, the press-gang, and privateering—in the days of Lord Nelson.

The heroine of Dickie, by Mrs. Hamilton Synge, is a little circus performer, and the book is full of glimpses of the seamy side of life in a travelling show. In the end, Dickie forsakes riding, and becomes a respectable member of society. (1s. 6d.)

Scouting for Buller, by Herbert Hayens (3s. 6d.), is devoted to a great chapter in the South African War. Of course, the siege and relief of Ladysmith occupies a central place in the story, which is full of animation from beginning to end. There is a coloured portrait of General Buller.

Madamscourt; or the Adventures of a Fugitive Princess (2s.), by H. May Poynter, tells the story of the escape of the Princess Clementina Sobieski from Innsprück in 1719, to be married to Prince James Francis Stuart. A goodly measure of imagination colours the narrative.

Youthful readers of "Comrades True" will welcome another story from the same author—On Honour. It is a happy description of school life, with its varied experience and inevitable discipline. Many quaint dialogues add much to the charm and simplicity of the narrative. (2s. 6d.)

In Professor Archie, by Leila Percival (1s.), the story is told in quiet, interesting fashion of how a fisher boy, who was enabled by the holding of a bursary to proceed to more than the customary elementary education, and through many vicissitudes attained to a Cambridge professorship.

Three Sailor Boys; or, Adrift in the Pacific, by Commander Lovett Cameron (1s. 6d.), tells what befel three runaways, their experiences and shifts, adventures and struggles. One of the boys, as well as a benevolent native, ended by becoming "missionary man"; so that in the last chapter the Golden Fleece clipper disappears, and the mission ship, Dayspring, comes on the scene. A very readable story for boys.

Yet another book from the prolific pen of E. Everett Green, and that a historic tale of great interest—In Fair Granada: A Tale of Moors and Christians (5s.). The pages take us back to the sixteenth century, and depict scenes of love and war. On being compelled to embrace Christianity, as the Romish doctrines and ceremonies were called—the Moors were called Moriscos. They remained Mohammedan at heart, and at length rose against their rulers. The sad chapter of history is forcibly narrated, and there are many pathetic and chivalrous elements in the story.

Religious Tract Society.

The author of Thorns and Thistles could not have chosen a more fitting title for his capital and fascinating narrative. The story is wholesome and lofty, and among the weeds there are many fragrant roses. (1s. 6d.)

A charming study of home life at a country rectory appears in How the Dreams Came True. The opening chapters find four girls planning their future, and the subsequent pages form a sequel of tender and deep human interest. (2s. 6d.)

Keziah Crabbe, Spinster, was an individual who, for the greater part of her life, lived for self alone, but was eventually led to spend and be spent for the sake of others, through the simple piety and example of a poorer neighbour. The book will appeal to both old and young. (1s.)

Readers of "About Peggy Saville" will welcome the continuation of the doings of this heroine in More About Peggy. The primary and incidental character sketches are remarkably well done. The literary merit and moral tone of the book are beyond question. (2s. 6d.)

Young and old alike will find pleasure in reading Anthony Cragg's Tenant. From beginning to end the story of this individual and his daughter entertains and instructs, unfolding as it does, characters of the highest type, and their noble bearing in the midst of unmerited scorn and contempt. (2s. 6d.)

North Overland With Franklin. By J. Macdonald Oxley. (2s. 6d.) Just what we should expect from its author—a splendid tale for "our boys"—and plenty of life in the pages. There are chapters on the Red man and his ways, also on the Natural History of the far north. It is sufficient to say that there is not a dull page in the book.

R. Culley.

Twelve well-told short stories likely to be appreciated by boyish readers are given by Mr. William J. Forster in A Terrible Fix (1s.), each of them inculcating a healthy lesson.

The girls who read The Old House at Rungate, by Isabel S. Robson (1s.), will find expressed there the charm of self-sacrifice for others. The story is a simple one, yet told in most winning fashion.

A "Help-myself and Help-each-other" Society would work a marvellous improvement in many households besides that of Aunt Chrissie, of which Emily Spratling writes in a very interesting way. (9d.)

The history of Gerald's Adventure (1s.), by Alice Briggs, is told in a fashion that will draw out the interest of boyish readers, not only to his promotion in the army, but to entering the service of the Heavenly Captain.

A. H. Stockwell.

A simple story of homely ways and warm love will be found in From Loneliness to Love, by R.I. M. (1s.)

Osmunda, My Queen, is an interesting tale, well conceived and executed, by Alex. F. B. Redlock. (3s. 6d.)

Eglanton Thorne has written a story illustrating many of the ups and downs of life in A Girl of the Name of Brown. (2s. 6d.)

Fitting illustrations of our Lord's command about forgiveness will be found in Until Seventy Times Seven, by Amy Whipple. (1s.)

The griefs and joys of many a career are echoed in Nellie; or, a Chequered Life, an interesting story of a girl's experiences, by Ethel Chilvers. (2s. 6d.)

Some of the darker passions of the human heart are pictured in Margaret, by Albert H. Hodges (2s.), alongside the graces of the Christian character.

The light and shade of social and family life are blended in The Ways of the World (3s. 6d.), by Esca Gray. Keen insight is shown in the delineation of character.

In Donnie, by F. R. Brunskill (2s. 6d.), the title character is a child, the unravelling of whose fortunes brings the reader into contact with a number of interesting people.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR CARDS.

Some interesting cards and calendars have been issued by The Alpha Card Publishing Co., 54, Hillfield Avenue, Hornsey, N. Bearing floral and landscape designs, they are artistically chaste. The mottoes and texts are Scriptural and appropriate. (Assorted parcels, 2s. 6d. and 5s. 6d., post free).

Messrs. Hills & Co., Ltd., have sent out many varieties of attractive Christmas cards, in which floral and art designs are presented in most attractive fashion. A packet is provided for friends in mourning; and Irish, Scotch, and Colonial friends have also been kept specially in mind. Among calendars "Our Cathedrals" and "Picturesque England" (1s. 6d. each) we commend heartily.

Messrs W. G. Wheeler & Co. afford a choice selection of cards. The well-known "Mildmay" and "Keswick" especially will be deemed favourites, as in addition to their exceedingly good taste and variety, they bear appropriate "messages from the King," which will bring cheer and comfort to many hearts.

Notes & Comments

"What Can I Do?"

When the first King of Italy made a triumphal entry into one of the large cities after the War of Independence, amid the gorgeous and costly decorations along the route there was a simple one which affected him to tears. It was composed of three strips of cloth, the colours of the new kingdom, and a soldier who had fought through the campaign had suspended them from his little window, with the inscription, "Italy, I love thee. I would that I could do more for thee. But what I can I do?" If the poor soldier's words, "What I can I do?" were adopted by every Christian as the standard of his or her benevolence, what an impulse would be given to all missionary and philanthropic work. It is difficult, however, to bring people to remember that it is not the amount of the gift, or the length of the prayer, but the love behind the offering, and the spirit that prompts the petition and the praise, that are dear to God.

The Illusion of Naturalism.

It is significant that Mr. Balfour's book, the "Foundations of Belief," has reached an eighth edition. In a new preface the statesman, answering his critics, reiterates his old position with greater force than ever, and he has completely destroyed "the illusion that naturalism is a creed in which mankind may find intellectual repose." "Naturalism" has been so glibly preached by its apostles that it is well to have, from a capable mind, a logical demonstration of its impossibility for the intellect—to say nothing of the heart. Pride affects scorn for aught that moves the heart; the intellect is everything. It is well that this refuge has been destroyed. There yet remains what Mr. Balfour does not attempt to do, i.e., to show that, the human refuge being destroyed, the only place of rest for man is in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Theological "Reconciliation."

A movement is on foot in America aiming at the reunion of the "New Unitarianism" and the "New Liberalism," on the ground that the same principles are fundamentally followed by each party, these being—

Freedom as the method of religion, in place of authority or tradition; fellowship as the spirit in religion in place of sectarianism; character as the test in religion instead of ritual or creed; salvation of others the aim in religion instead of salvation of self.

In the words we have italicised we find one of the most mischievous of false antitheses, and if the "new orthodoxy" in America, or anywhere else, is guilty of such a vital error in its aims, it matters little with what party it may join, for it is doomed to utter defeat and extinction, whatever secondary virtues it may possess. To substitute the salvation of others as the aim of religion for the salvation of self is to reduce it to an absurdity.

A Mischievous Catchword.

"Salvation of self" and "salvation of others" as the aims of religion are not alternatives, but co-ordinates. The man who seeks his own spiritual safety and cares nothing for that of others has failed to learn the alphabet of salvation. The first appeal of Christ is to the individual; this follows as a matter of course, for if a man has not the blessing for himself, how can he carry it to others? But the man who has been truly saved at once becomes an apostle to others. This is an inevitable law; it is the way in which the Christian religion has been propagated from the beginning. The implied charge against the "Old Orthodoxy," that it has been guilty of selfishness in its treatment of the Gospel message, is a miserable slander; for it has always been passionately full of missionary enthusiasm, and is the parent of every successful missionary movement in the last century. The first law of the Christian life is —"Accept the gift of life for yourself," the second is "Take it forth to others." The alternative would logically be, a "Christian community in which everyone will be eagerly interested in everybody's conversion except his own.

The Looting in Pekin.

The aftermath of the Chinese trouble is disclosing some disagreeable incidents. The publication of General Voyron's report to his (the French) Government has made something of a sensation, particularly that part of it which accuses the "Lazarist Fathers" of paying French soldiers to loot the palaces. If this be true, then no reprobation can be too strong for it. But all the Powers concerned should insist upon specific charges and proofs, and pay no heed to vague accusations against "missionaries" in general. We have had too much of that already. M. Pichon, late French minister in China, puts a different construction upon certain of the charges made, and denies the truth of wholesale pillage by missionaries. Doubtless some scandalous things were done in China by Europeans, for which there is not an atom of excuse. But common honesty demands that only the guilty parties shall be blamed for these misdeeds.

Romanism and Missionary Effort.

The Vie Catholique has been lamenting the decay of missionary enthusiasm in the Roman Catholic, as compared with the Protestant Churches. The article is valuable as an unwilling testimony to the fervour and devotion shown by the Evangelical churches during the last century in their endeavours to reach the heathen nations; and also as a revelation of the attitude taken by Papists towards these efforts, which are lamented as a "disquieting progress of sectarianism." The contrast is indeed startling between the £160,000 spent annually by the Roman Church in missionary effort and the £3,600,000 a year devoted by Protestants. Both sums are quite inadequate to the end in view, and the golden age of missions has not yet come. But they are thoroughly typical of the comparative vitality of the Christian faith and spirit in the two directions. The churches that have lost their missionary fervour are doomed. The future is with those that are consumed with the evangelic passion for carrying the Gospel to every land and creature.

Time's Justification.

It is not always that one who makes a bold stand for righteousness, contrary to the opinions of his contemporaries, receives from the latter during his lifetime a justification of his action. Many great men have passed into eternity unappreciated by those for whom they have laboured. But the hour of justification must arrive sooner or later. Savonarola was burned and execrated and forgotten, but not so long ago Florence erected a monument to him upon which is inscribed the sentence, "After four hundred years Italy remembers." A man needs great faith in God in order to persist in a true but unpopular cause. This faith includes waiting, but the man of faith can afford to wait for his justification. Always he is justified in heaven, but time will bring him justification upon earth as well—if not to his person, then certainly to his memory. This consideration should console all who in the name of God are espousing righteous but unpopular causes. The cause is greater than its advocate.

The L.C.C. and Licences.

We congratulate the Licensing Committee of the L.C.C. upon its firm resolve to study the respectable public, as well as the applicants for liquor licences. Again one or two prominent houses of amusement have been refused drink licences, for the double reason that they are unnecessary, and that the entertainment pays, as an entertainment, apart from any profits accruing from drink. The demand for a drink licence, on the ground that an entertainment would suffer without it, is a poor compliment to the entertainment. When people go to be entertained, they are not desperate if drink is not forthcoming; but if the drink is the chief thing, it is obvious that something is lacking in the entertainment, and in that light the application must be considered. It may please interested people to charge the L.C.C. Committee with "fanatical prejudice;" but unbiassed people must admit that sound business principles, at least, guide the Committee in their decisions. We hope that its recommendations will be upheld before the full Council.

"A Trick of the Trade."

But "one swallow does not make a summer," and this year's renewal of restrictions does not mean final settlement. It is a favourite but ignoble trick on the part of some entertainment promoters, when a place of amusement is in contemplation, to make the absence of drink a special plea for the granting of a music and dancing licence. This gained, and the entertainment once an accomplished fact, they clamour at the next licensing session for a licence on the ground that "it is unfair to deny to them what is acceded to another place of amusement near by." Fortunately, the Licensing Committee has shown it is not to be bamboozled in this way; but vigilance is required every year to deal with such tactics.

The Trade in Betting Tips.

It is to be hoped that the London County Council will not put any obstacles in the way of the proposed action on the part of several local councils with regard to the sale of betting tips. The evil is a crying one, for in many cases the trade is simply a cover for the facilities for gambling which are afforded at the shops where the business is carried on. Prohibitive bye-laws are, therefore, urgently required, and if they can be framed by the London County Council, to whom the Home Secretary has already referred the matter, so much the better. The two councils that have taken the initiative certainly deserve commendation.

The Decadence of Plays. We are glad to see the attempt being made by Mr. Clement Scott, himself a lover of the drama, to create a healthy reaction against the neurotic plays which are so sadly in evidence, and which deal with some of the gravest and most sacred subjects in anything but a sacred manner. The direct result of certain popular plays is to offer an apology for the nastiness of life, and to make men careless about any correction of their disorders. When the theatre undertakes to demonstrate the fatality and incurability of a vicious heredity, without one word on the other side, it simply offers a premium upon vice. The stage has taken to preaching the depravity of men and women, with no remedy for it, but rather a fatalistic apology for it. This is a menace to morals. We cannot do other than wish for Mr. Scott's success in his crusade.

Studies in Sin. A serious decadence is also observable in much of our modern literature, and it is noteworthy how large a portion of it consists simply of attempts to diagnose moral deformity and disease, and to depict humanity as irremediably bound to evil by chains of heredity and environment, and the "doctrine of averages." Quite recently a critic upon the daily papers, who also is editor of a leading monthly review, has asserted that "the morality of a book is not the critic's concern," that it is not his business to decide whether a book is immoral, "because his ethical convictions are almost invariably coloured by his religious conditions." The result of this decadence in literature and in criticism is found in the fact that most of the unpleasant and unsavoury volumes are not true even to nature, and do not indicate in any way the punishment which inevitably follows upon breaches of her laws.

A Noble Irishman. In view of the crimes and vices which fill the heart with pain and shame at the degradation of human nature, it is a relief to read, at least occasionally, of the heights of heroism to which men are capable of rising under a sense of duty and self-sacrifice. Such noble deeds as that recorded below are deserving of wide publicity and a long grateful remembrance:—

Dr. William Smyth, of Dungloe, co. Donegal, a dispensary doctor of the district, contracted typhus fever in the discharge of his duties. Having learned that there was a case of virulent typhus on the island of Arranmore, he, with difficulty, procured an old boat, and, accompanied by Dr. M'Carthy, Local Government Board Inspector, went over and brought the patient to the mainland. Dr. Smyth contracted the disease, and died in a few days. His predecessor met his death under exactly similar circumstances.

Helping the Devil. Mr. Spurgeon once preached a telling sermon bearing the singular and suggestive title, "How Saints may Help the Devil." Many good people help him more than they are aware by their hypercriticisms upon modes of service in which they have no interest. We are very sorry that such wide prominence has been given in the newspapers to the unkind and unjust aspersions cast upon temperance people in Dean Hole's lately published book of reminiscences—the Dean would class tectotalers with fanatics and weak-minded people. How delighted the brewers and publicans will be to have so great a dignitary as their champion! But will such uncalled for bantering aid in ridding the land of the frightful incubus which is strangling its life? If Christian men refuse directly to aid the cause of temperance, they ought at least to refrain from attacking those who are working might and main in the holy cause. According to the Dean, we owe everything that is noble in modern civilization to the drink:

The Jew drank, and gave us monotheism and Christianity; the Greek drank, and gave us literature and art; the Roman drank, and gave us law; the Teuton drank (hard), and gave us the passion for freedom.

The Morals of Compensation. It is to be regretted that at the business meeting of the Christian Social Union it should have been thought necessary to press upon the members the necessity for studying "the moral principles on which compensation (to the publican) should be based." Six years ago Sir Wm. Harcourt thought, to judge from his proposed Bill of 1895, that a three years notice, without any money compensation, would be sufficiently generous, and it is beyond question that in strict justice to the tax and ratepayer no further fiscal burdens should be created for the benefit of the brewer and the publican. How huge such a burden would be, especially if a government dependent upon the drink trade for its very existence had the framing of it, may be estimated from the fact that a few years ago Mr. Buxton, the brewer, valued the public-house licenses in London alone at £60,000,000. If compensation is required at all, it should come from the pockets of the trade itself. Let those who retain their licences compensate those who lose them.

Canon Henson on Proselytism. Canon Hensley Henson has continued his attack from the pulpit in Westminster Abbey on the exclusive and narrow spirit now dominant in the Anglican Church towards Christians of other denominations. He believes that the time has come for the National Church to enter into a federation of fraternity, including, of course, intercommunion, with all the ordered and orthodox non-episcopal churches. This courageous utterance runs counter to almost all the recent official utterances of Anglican leaders, but it represents the opinion of a large section of the members of the Church of England.

The Child and the Font. A Ritualistic contemporary deplores the fact that so many children "who are admitted to Christ's fold through baptism," grow up in utter ignorance of God's law, and never approach the Church at all. The cause of this is declared to be the carelessness of parents and sponsors, many of whom undertake responsibilities which they have not the remotest intention of carrying out; hence the whole office of baptism is utterly destitute of meaning for them. One of the first remedies to be tried is to teach parents the elements of the Gospel, and the difference between faith and superstitious belief in rites.

Italy and the Vatican. A singular illustration of the growing feeling in regard to the political side of Romanism has been afforded by the action of the government of Italy in prohibiting all meetings, other than religious, in Roman Catholic chapels, because they have been transformed into meeting places for bodies "hostile to the country and its institutions." Italy, like other continental countries, is awakening to the danger from the enemy within her gates; England, with all her wealth of experience, is wilfully shutting her eyes to it.

The Gospel Riots in Greece. We are indebted to the Daily News for an explanation of the so-called "Gospel Riots" at Athens, which broke out ostensibly as a protest against the appearance of a version of the Greek Testament in Modern Greek, but which turn out to have had a politico-ecclesiastical origin. This particular translation emanated from Queen Olga, whose action was interpreted as being instigated by emissaries of the Russian Church, with a view to the absorption of the ancient Greek Church into the "monotonous Russian Orthodoxy." The connection is not very obvious to outsiders, but it is at any rate satisfactory to learn that the opposition of the students did not arise from any objection to a modern translation of the ancient Greek text. There have been, as a matter of fact, several versions of the New Testament in the vernacular. More than fifty years ago the Bible Society issued a translation by Dr. Bambas, a learned Greek priest, which has been in constant and unhindered circulation in Greece and the East, and may be purchased at a nominal price. These facts throw this strange outbreak into a somewhat more intelligible perspective.

Beneath the Surface. Periodically English people are forced, by some particularly sad circumstance, to take note of the life lived beneath the surface in big towns and cities; but after the excitement has passed the incident is forgotten, and they go on in the same old way. Mr. Rowntree, in his recent book on "Poverty—a Study of Town Life" (Macmillan), has lifted the veil from his own native city of York, and exposed the kind of life which is lived under the very shadow of the Minster. It would do everybody good to peruse this delineation of actual life. Four hundred and seventy-four families average in earnings 11s. 7d. per week each, i.e., a trifle over 4d. per day per person. Hundreds live from hand to mouth. There are nearly 4,500 persons who earn less than a pound a week, the majority of them being married. The wages of unskilled labourers is insufficient to provide for the adequate necessities of life. It is hardly surprising to find that Church attendance, according to a census taken, touches only 28 per cent. of the population.

No Room to Die. It is not long since the public was startled by the revelations in Mr. George Haer's book, "No Room to Live," but painful as were his revelations, they fade before the statement recently made by the Medical Superintendent of Lambeth Infirmary that, out of 700 deaths in that building during the year 200 were cases of people who had come to the infirmary simply to die, "because they had no room to die at home." Truly the "one-room" system, which so many are forced to adopt, has much to answer for. Mr. Arnold White, some years ago, pictured such a "home," with its coffin in the corner, and the narrative was strongly questioned; but a few days ago a city missionary told of a visit in which he found the crowded tenants of a room taking tea upon the coffin containing a member of the family. The responsibility for the continuance of such a condition of things cannot be shelved by either the State or the individual.

Practical Papers.

On "The Fancies of Life."

"OH that I had—wings! Then ——!" There is an element in human nature which continually longs for things to be otherwise than as they are. "If only we were differently placed, how much better lives we could live!" And we spend more time in imagining what we would do under altered circumstances, than we earnestly devote to performing what we ought to do, situated as we are.

"Oh that I had—what I have not! Oh that I had—what someone else has!" is the language of the malcontents. In the summer they wish it were winter; in winter, they pine for the warmth of summer. If they live in the city, they long for the country; when there they pronounce it "too slow," and hurry back to town. In the valley they yearn for the mountain tops; when they reach them, they cry for the valley again.

The king riding along the highway, passes the stone-breaker by the wayside. Thinks the latter, "Oh that I were like that king, possessed of all that heart can wish!" And the monarch, glancing at him, murmurs, "Would I were like that man, so free from anxiety, with so little worry and care!" It is only an incident that makes the one a stone-breaker and the other a king. To enter heaven the king must become as a little child, and the stone-breaker will be his equal in the royal family of God.

A fable is told of a beetle and a weathercock. "How fine," said the former, "to be up there; what splendid views, how clear the atmosphere?" "Yes," replied the other, "and if you were up here, you would know how keenly blows the wind!"

When Jesus entered and passed through Jericho, Zacchæus sought to see Him. But the crowd was so dense, what chance had he? Yet the crowd, which to him was such a formidable obstacle, had been of the greatest service to the blind man a little while before, and had brought him to Jesus. We are not all made by the same pattern, nor does God deal with us all alike. The very thing which is a hindrance to one may be a help to the brother at his side.

Again, Zacchæus bitterly regretted the limits of his stature. But it made him run and climb, which probably he had not done for many a day; thus were called into action faculties that had long lain dormant, and but for his "disadvantages" would not have been aroused into energy at all. This, with the casting aside of personal dignity that it involved, made it all the easier for him to respond to the Master's call. So, too, with us. God may hedge in our way with so-called "disadvantages" in order to call forth the development of faculties and powers, of gifts and talents, which otherwise would have remained dormant still.

You say, "I cannot live the Christian life in my present surroundings. If only I were in a Christian family or house of business, there I could serve God as I ought, but not as I am." Or, maybe, the state of your health or funds is a source of discontent. Yet God may have ordained it so in order the better to awaken a spiritual energy that otherwise you had not known. "Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now have I kept thy Word."

We shall be judged hereafter, not by what we have got, but by what we have done. We go up the Thames in the summer time and see the elegant bungalows and villas which the wealthy occupy during the season. Charmed with the profusion of flowers and the beauties of the scene, we say with envy, "A rich man lives there!" Yes, perhaps so; but he may go there year by year, or to a shooting-box in the Highlands for which he pays a high figure, and yet leave no footprints on the sands of time that are worth regarding after he is gone. It is not what a man has, but what he is, that will mark his eternal destiny. A hundred years hence it will make no difference whether we had little or much; but it will make all the difference how we used the much or the little that we had.

But not only do we envy what other people have; we often wish we had what others have not. "Wings," for example—something to differentiate us from our neighbours, to give us some advantage above the crowd, to make people stare and gape with envy! If only we had wings—what wonders we would do! Yet how unpractical! Even the disciples, as they watched the Lord go into heaven, stood so long that at last a voice recalled them to their duty with the words, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven?"

Thus do many occupy their time. Too much Christian life amounts to little more than standing, gazing, yearning after wings. Whether or not we are to have them by-and-by, at present we have heads and hands, eyes, and feet and ears to use for God. Their utility to-day is much greater than that of wings would be, and there is more than ample scope for them in every kind of Christian service.

Therefore let us think less about the fancies of life, and bravely face its facts; let us give up dreaming of things as we wish they were, and make the best of them as they are. G.

By Rev. K. MOODY-STUART, M.A.

MOUNT ARARAT has an important message for the world. It testifies that Jehovah is the God of the whole earth; that He had providential and gracious dealings with the sons of men long before He chose the seed of Abraham as his peculiar people; and that in the revelation which He has given us He has spoken to all races of mankind. Ararat, with dark storm-clouds often hovering over its hoary head, speaks to men of mercy and judgment; and, as we contemplate its majesty and history, we are constrained to exclaim: "Thy righteousness is like the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep. O Lord, Thou preservest man and beast. How precious is thy lovingkindness, O God; therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings." . . .

The first lesson taught us by Mount Ararat is that "the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men." Ararat, with his hoary head and shoulders draped with cloud, stood like a grim old sentry watching the destruction of the world of the ungodly; and he cries aloud to men, that "The soul that sinneth it shall die"; that "The wages of sin is death." At the same time we are reminded that the God of all the earth has "no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live." For the divine judgment did not fall without warning upon that ancient world, "when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah while the ark was a-preparing." The Lord gave men space to repent when He said that though his "Spirit should not always strive with man, yet his days should be 120 years"; but they repented not. We also are told to "account that the long-suffering of God is salvation," for He is "long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." That great mountain surely still testifies to a world that has anew rebelled against Him, of the forbearance of God.

But Ararat witnesses to the mercy as well as to the forbearance of God; for "the ark," we are told, "rested upon the mountains of Ararat." It witnesses to the effectiveness of the ark for the purpose for which it was constructed. We may picture to ourselves the strange vessel in process of building, or floating on the waste of waters with its precious freight; but Ararat bids us see it moored in port, its voyage successfully accomplished. Its beams and planks and pitch have kept the billows out.

The ark preserved its inmates from a watery tomb, the force of the flood of divine wrath being restricted to the sprinkling of their floating home with the drenching rain or its immersion in the driving waves—"the like figure whereunto baptism doth also now save us, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." Its voyage over, "the ark rested upon the mountains of Ararat"; as Jesus, the true Ark, having accomplished his mission, now rests on the mount of God above.

As typified by the ark, Christ is the Saviour of the whole creation, as well as of man, its natural head. For as "we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now," so we know that the whole creation is represented in the prophetical writings as rejoicing in the completed redemption. Mount Ararat may be viewed as a Titanic tombstone marking the grave of the old world of lust, violence, and crime; but it may be as correctly viewed as the Plymouth Rock of the world in which we dwell, the landing-stage where the vessel was moored which carried the Pilgrim Fathers of the world's early youth into the new world; the new era into which the race of mankind then entered—an era of mercy, an era of grace.

Mount Ararat witnesses to peace between God and man. The dove bearing the olive-leaf plucked off has ever since been the symbol of heavenly peace. Peace is a precious gift from God to man—precious when breathed by Jesus after his resurrection on his assembled disciples; precious when whispered by the Holy Spirit in the secret chambers of the soul; but precious also when its symbol was carried to Noah by the gentle dove. Man had involved the lower creatures in his own ruin; yet these first brought him the news of peace and redemption which they shared with their head.

> Sweet dove, that homeward winging,
> O'er endless waves thy lonely way,
> Now hither bendst thee bringing
> The long-sought olive spray;
> It tells that love still reigns above,
> That God doth not his own forget,
> That mercy's ray upspringing
> Shall light the lost world yet.
> Thomas Moore.

Noah's dove bringing the welcome message that there was "peace on earth, good-will to men," was the precursor of the Holy Dove, the sweet messenger of rest, who, winging his way from heaven above, found no resting-place in our sin-deluged earth till he alighted on Jesus, the Church's true Ark, and abode upon Him. And now, "being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

. . . . . .

Have you, "moved with fear," fled from the wrath to come, to Jesus who has been prepared by God to be his people's Ark of safety?

Have you been brought by Jesus through the flood of wrath, and been introduced by Him into a state where old things are passed away, and all things are become new?

Have you welcomed the Divine Spirit as the Heavenly Dove, and received from Him a token of peace?

Have you built an altar to God your Saviour, and have you offered to Him all that He asks you for?

Are you dwelling under the arch of peace, remembering that though its beautiful hues are transient, the new covenant of which it is the divinely-selected token is eternal?

* Extract from the chapter on "Mount Ararat," in Light from the Holy Hills. Lessons from Old Testament Mountains. By Rev. Kenneth Moody-Stuart, M.A. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) A volume replete with striking and suggestive thought, from which many a Christian worker will derive help in his study and service.

A Day of Small Things.

DR. BAEDEKER introduced us to several small meetings of believers, most of which had been formed through men or women, or both, whom he had been the means of guiding into the light. One of those whom he led out into definite Christian service was Fräulein von Blücher, who some years ago built a hall close to her house in Berlin, where many souls have been brought into the liberty of the glory of the sons of God. English brethren have from time to time ministered there; among them, within the past year or two, was our ubiquitous and fruitful friend, Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Just before Dr. Baedeker left us to return to England, he asked me to visit a town of 8,000 inhabitants in Northern Hungary, and a village ten miles away from it. Here a quite noteworthy work began about twelve years ago. Two sisters were led by the Spirit to go to a town in Bohemia, seeking rest for their souls. An evangelist showed them the way of life; "but he gave us too much of Moses," said the sister, who told us the story. "But that was needful," interposed the other. No doubt it was; the pinch that Moses gave to Pilgrim was a part of the process by which he was led to the Wicket Gate and the Palace Beautiful.

These sisters then heard that Dr. Baedeker was in Prague, whither at once they went, and this second evangelist was used to complete what the Spirit of Truth by the other had begun.

AN ENCOURAGING RESULT.

Having returned home, they immediately began to let their light shine, and to hold forth the Word of Life. For some years their patience was tried, but in the fifth year God breathed as with his south wind, and the Word accomplished that whereto He had sent it. Instead of the thorn came up the fir tree, and, instead of the brier, the myrtle tree. One of these fir trees, now in the house of the Lord, was an innkeeper and musician who had years before committed a murder, and his conscience heard the blood of the victim cry from the ground. At length, in his search for rest, he came to one of the meetings held by these sisters. There he found peace with God, and the peace of the God of Peace possessed his soul.

But only for a little while. Moses, the man of God, stepped in—the law, holy and just and good, had said, "Thou shalt do no murder." Things did not go well with him, and the unconfessed sin was the cause. At last this publican felt that he must make restitution. He gave himself up to justice; but as there was no sufficient evidence beyond his own self-accusation, the officers of the law declined to act. Before this confession, he had retired from his saloon and from his worldly music; but God requireth that which is past. After his confession his peace was restored, and now, if overtaken by a fault, he comes and confesses it at once.

This is one instance of God's working; time and space do not admit of my adding more than this—that any one who will, may trace the hand of God through the twelve years during which this work has endured. There have been no ordinances administered hitherto. Ninety saved people are the nucleus of the meetings. But although the movement has exhibited more signs of life than any other during the same period in the same locality, it has been regarded as a speckled bird. So with the beautiful work of Fräulein von Blücher in Berlin, and many more.

A SERIOUS AND PRACTICAL QUESTION.

I am asking myself, Why is this? Why are the larger organizations so disposed to despise the day of small things? When, some years ago, Methodism showed a few young green leaves above the ground in Vienna, the Lutheran pastors endeavoured to prevent its development. The Lutheran Church also, with the Reformed Church, cried out, when the Free Reformed Church arose, to be protected from that new sect.

A like spirit exists elsewhere. Men who are, generally speaking, generous and large-hearted, have expressed themselves as out of sympathy with all small missions, especially if "unattached." But which of the great denominations had not its origin in some such unconsidered trifle?

Methodism, which asserts itself as a synonym for Christianity, was born on a tombstone, nursed in cottages and kitchens, and grew strong by five-in-the-morning prayer meetings, and field-preaching among horny-handed and black-faced Kingswood colliers. God thus honoured it.

Every one of the great Protestant denominations was a feeble folk at first. "Religious Liberty" and the "Voluntary Principle" used to be the emphatic watchwords of what are now called the Free Churches. Ought not the like liberty and the like principles to be claimed for others, instead of denied to them, by those who have contended for their enjoyment themselves?

He is a free man whom the truth makes free,
And all are slaves beside.

It was among a few women by a river side that a little man (who was perhaps called Paulus—little, in contrast to that other Saul, who was a head and shoulders taller than any other man in Israel) founded, by the grace of God, at Philippi, the first Church of Christ in Europe.

It was by means of a few women of a like ilk that God laid his hand upon a profane tinker and transfigured him into an inspired dreamer, who dreamed dreams in prison which have sounded the tocsin of spiritual liberty to thousands of captive souls.

Where would the Church of Christ have been—"his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all"—but for the Apostles, who were "made the offscouring of all things," "a spectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men"? Where, but for the witnesses, endued with power, clothed in sackcloth, who have gone forth unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach?

It is not great Sauls who build up the kingdom, but shepherd boys taken from caring for the flock; striplings who have gazed into the midnight heavens, and heard the music of the spheres declare the glory of God, until they fell down and worshipped, saying, "What is man, that Thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that Thou visitest him?"

When I remember the Revival of 1859, and how glorious a time it was, yet hindered and cut short where churches shut their hearts and doors against it, I am distressed to find good men unmindful of the possibilities hidden in every movement of the Holy Spirit. If the historical headmaster of Rugby took off his hat to his scholars because there might be a Milton or Luther or Bunyan among them, we may well respect every conventicle where Christ is preached; for if He be lifted up He will draw unto Himself all whom God has given Him. I remember a man in Christ, bearing one of our country's most honoured names, who, when he passed an open-air meeting, in a slum or in a park, uncovered his head, to show his respect to the Master whom he served.

"He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might He increaseth strength." R. C. M.

Brentwood Convention.

THE fourth Brentwood Christian Convention was held in the parochial hall, November 19-21. The meetings were preceded by special prayer, and on Tuesday afternoon Rev. Fuller Gooch delivered a most helpful address from Job xl. 1; xlii. 1-6. In the evening, Dr. John Robertson spoke from Romans vi. 22, showing that the Christian life began in the freedom from sin, which leads to personal service, fruit bearing, and ultimately to the full blessing of eternal life in glory. Mr. Sturges followed, speaking on 1 John i., and showing that it was the Christian duty to live in the enjoyment of eternal life now, and not to wait for its future consummation.

On Wednesday afternoon, Rev. J. Wilkinson delivered a most instructive discourse on "God's purpose in his people Israel." The evening was devoted to missionary work, and four societies were represented: Mildmay Mission to the Jews by Rev. J. Wilkinson, Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen by Mr. Wilson, North Africa Mission by Mr. Glenny, and South American Mission to Roman Catholics by Mr. Hudson.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. Max Reich spoke upon the second coming of Christ. The closing meeting in the evening was conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, who based his address on Romans v. 19.

So far as we can judge, the Convention has been a great success. It has deepened the spiritual life of God's people, has created a stronger desire for Bible truth, and has brought together Christians of different denominations for mutual help. J. D.

The Million Pledges' Campaign.

DEAR SIR,—The Campaign associated with Dr. Henry's name, and so ably seconded by the services of the Jubilee Singers, has stirred the hearts of God's children in each of the great centres of population which they have visited.

Vast audiences of people have gathered in Bradford, Leeds, Bristol, Brighton, and elsewhere. In Manchester on one Sunday, Dr. Henry addressed 14,000 persons.

But best of all, thousands of drunkards have been reclaimed, and thousands of professing Christians have been led to sign the pledge for the sake of others. There must have been joy in heaven over these results.

But the initial costs of starting the movement have been prodigious, and as President of the campaign I want to appeal to all readers of The Christian to help us, by sending contributions of larger or smaller amounts, either direct to myself or to Messrs. Morgan and Scott.

I am in great earnest in this matter, and shall be glad of all amounts from one shilling to one hundred pounds. I am glad to do all I can in organizing if others will help by their gifts.

With cordial affection to all God's children, I remain, yours sincerely,

F. B. Meyer.

Home for Missionaries.—A few days ago, in the presence of a small band of Christians, the house No. 7, Bruce Grove, Tottenham, was dedicated to God by praise and prayer, for use as a home where missionaries and their families may stay at a very moderate cost on their arrival from abroad, or when about to start for their spheres of service, or for any reason desiring to tarry in London. The house has been taken and furnished by the generosity of a few friends; and is an answer to many prayers. It is not intended as a substitute for private hospitality, but to serve as a supplement to it. It is hoped that it will be a comfort to many of God's servants. Applications may be made to Mrs. Fenn, 7, Bruce Grove, Tottenham, N. Information may also be obtained and donations sent to Miss Howard (Treasurer), 6, Bruce Grove, Tottenham; and Margaret Lady Congleton, 53, Gt. Cumberland Place, W.

Elijah: The Prophet of all Time.

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A., of All Souls, W.

III.—God's Smelting Furnace.

THE quiet sojourn at Cherith was unexpectedly cut short. "A good servant moves the moment the bell rings." God's bell rang while Elijah was enjoying the peaceful solitude at Cherith, and at once he started off for Zarephath. We are all in danger of having our faith propped up by favourable circumstances. So God lets the brook dry up to teach his servant to rest only upon his Word.

Change is often beneficial. It is by a judicious system of transplanting that certain shrubs are brought to the highest state of luxurious foliage. It was brought as a serious charge against Moab that she was settled upon the lees, and had not been emptied from vessel to vessel. Only as the wine is drawn off from the sediment does it lose its muddy colour and offensive smell, and become clear and sweet. So was it to be with Elijah. He had been emptied from Gilead to Jezreel, and from Jezreel to Cherith; now he is to be emptied from Cherith to Zarephath.

A LESSON IN WAITING.

The change was brought about in a very trying manner. We are all prone to anticipate evil and meet troubles half way. To any but a man of faith, it is real torture to have to sit beside a drying brook. Anxiety as to what must be done when the water is all gone, would beset most minds like a horrible nightmare. To learn to wait till the trouble comes, and then ascertain God's way out of it, is a peculiarly difficult lesson for men of energy and resource.

It was the water that failed, not the ravens. It was the natural, not the supernatural, provision that came to an end. That for which the prophet looked upward morning and evening continued steadily. That which had been flowing at his feet all day long, began suddenly to diminish When a trouble comes straight from heaven, we are more likely to see God's hand in it, and to submit patiently and trustfully. When, however, the trouble seems to come quite naturally, and the brook dries up because there is no rain, then we are tempted to look at these secondary causes, and to forget that God is behind them all.

BESIDE THE DRYING BROOK.

God's servants may often have to sit beside drying brooks. There is the ebbing of the tide of physical health and vigour. There is the ebbing of the tide of popularity and success. There is the drying brook of a dwindling income when, in spite of care and forethought, business languishes, heavy losses are incurred, and financial embarrassment ensues. Such times of serious perplexity are not infrequent with God's servants.

Elijah must have been sorely tempted at this juncture. The promise was clear—"Thou shalt drink of the brook," and now the brook was running dry. Its musical ripple, a ceaseless testimony to God's care, had awakened a constant song of praise in his heart. But now the music of the stream was hushed, and with the mournful silence a horror of doubt would assail him. Had God forgotten his servant? Were the resources of Jehovah coming to an end? Had God no longer the power to restrain the judgment he had sent upon the land? Or was He displeased with his servant? Had careless ease, a selfish forgetfulness of Israel's trouble, come between him and his God?

THE STRAIN ON FAITH.

Elijah's faith would be equal to the strain. He knew that trouble is no indication that we are outside the Divine plan. Joseph was as much in the centre of God's will when in the pit, or exposed for sale in the Egyptian slave market, or in the prison forgotten by the chief butler, as when in his mother's trust at Bethel. Elijah knew that an apparent failure in God's plan does not mean any abandonment of his purpose. Unbelief asked, "Why did God send me to Cherith if He knew the brook was going to run dry?" Faith answered, "This is part of God's secret purpose. I have only to wait for further orders." "None of them that trust in Him shall be desolate."

So he waited, and when the orders came he went to Zarephath. The name means a smelting furnace, and such the plan was to prove both to the prophet and to the widow with whom he sojourned. For here again Elijah's faith was severely tested.

The famine had reached beyond the confines of Samaria. All Phœnicia was in distress through it. Josephus quotes a reference to it from the poet Menander, who, writing B.C. 342, tells us that Ethbaal, the King of Tyre, arranged for solemn services in the temples of Ashtaroth to pray for rain. The widow woman had been involved in the general distress. The reference to a loft or first floor chamber shows that the house was not that of a poor woman. And yet the prophet found her picking up sticks on the high road for fuel. How could a widow in such straits of poverty manage to support him?

He asked for a drink of water, and she turned away silently to get it. Was not this the original pattern of the cup of cold water given in the name of a disciple, which Christ promised shall never fail of its reward? But he bade her also bring him a morsel of bread as well. Then the pent-up sorrow of her heart broke out, and she told her story. They had reached the last handful of meal. Despairing of relief, with heathen abandonment to fate, they were about to eat their last cake, and then lie down and die.

UNLIKELY SUCCOUR.

Was this the widow that should support him? Could this empty barrel and failing cruse ward off starvation during all the remaining time of famine? But God's word, "I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee," was ringing in his heart. Nothing is impossible with God. He had reached God's "there." God's promises never break down in the pathway of obedience.

Unbelief puts circumstances between us and God. Faith puts God between us and circumstances. The believer has Christ between him and his sins. The unbeliever has his sins still between him and Christ. Elijah did not look at the poverty of this widow. He looked at the power of God. He put God's promise between him and his fears. Yea, he boldly pledged God to fulfil his word. "Thus saith the Lord, The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the Lord shall send rain upon the earth."

EXEMPLARY OBEDIENCE.

But the widow's faith was tested as well. Marvellous, indeed, was her obedience to the prophet's strange order. How easy the retort, "If you can so confidently guarantee the meal in my hand, why are you now in want of food?" How difficult to obey the command, repeated a second time "without any blush of selfishness," knowing that it was God's test of this needy widow—"Make me a little cake first." How imperative the cry of nature, "Provide first for your own; don't take the food out of your child's mouth for a mere stranger." How grand the faith which, in spite of the pinched face of the half-starved boy, scraped together almost the last handful of meal to make the cake for God's prophet!

A certain widow cast into the treasury of the Temple two mites that were her all; but those were not days of famine, and probably she had no starving child at home. The sacrifice of the Zarephathite was the greater. "Me and my son" had been till now her only thought and care. Now she has to trust her son's welfare and her own to God, and to sacrifice almost her last morsel of food for God's servant. It must always be so. When God is really first, all heaven can be emptied out in blessing; till God is first, its windows are more or less shut above us.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Poor Ministers' Clothing Society appeals for help in the way of partly worn or cast-off clothing of any kind. The Society supplies parcels of wearing apparel to poor Baptist ministers and their families whose income is less than £50 a year. Parcels sent to the Hon. Sec., Poor Ministers' Clothing Society, Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, S.E., will be gratefully acknowledged.

Our Protestant Gospel.

By Rev. Dr. BALGARNIE.

"Thy sins are forgiven thee."

IT was a great blow to the pretensions of the Popish Church when the Reformers revived the doctrine of the New Testament, and preached the free and immediate forgiveness of sins. Pardon, they proclaimed—free, full, and immediate—did not come through the priesthood, but direct from Jesus Christ; it was not to be purchased with money; it was not to be gained by penances; it was not to be got in Purgatory; it was unpurchasable by human suffering; but "we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of God's grace." That put a stop at once and for ever to the sale of "indulgences." It opened the eyes of the Church and the world to the deliverance that Christ had purchased with his blood. It brought back the Gospel of redemption into Europe and restored it to the world. It broke the power of the Romish priesthood, and restored to us the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free.

And yet I am not certain that all Protestants fully understand what the death of Christ has done for them. Let us see. Christ, by his death, has redeemed us all; but it has not saved us all, for some have rejected the Gospel; therefore redemption is not the same as salvation. Redemption clears the ground for the offer of eternal life in Christ. Christ has made atonement by his blood for all the sins and crimes of our unconverted life, for all the guilt of our natural manhood, for all the wrongdoing of the descendants of the first Adam, till they become, at conversion, children of the Second Adam. So that there is full, free, and immediate pardon purchased and offered for every sin and crime committed in the days and years of our unregeneracy. "Thy sins are forgiven thee." This is not, strictly speaking, the Gospel of the ages—I mean the offer of eternal life in Christ—but it is, nevertheless, glad tidings of great joy for all nations. "Blessed are they that wash their robes that they may have a right to the Tree of Life."

RISE UP AND WALK.

As we lie before Him, helpless and palsy-stricken, in all the weakness and apathy of our natural manhood or womanhood, incapable of worship, incapable of service, incapable of doing anything that God could be pleased with—able only to turn and look and pray to Him—the Lord looks down upon us in infinite pity, infinite love, and sympathy, and forthwith we hear his voice calling to us, "Rise up and walk." That is the second stage of our spiritual recovery—the restoration of the soul to God. The word which we Protestants have hitherto failed to emphasize is, not pardon, or justification, but LIFE; "The just shall live by faith."

"Why, Lord?"

(Psalm lxxvii. 7-10.)

Oh! ask not WHY? dear child of God!
Trust Him and rest;
His way is best,
'Twill stand the test,
Then ask not WHY?

Oh! ask not why the way is lone,
Bereft of all that was thine own!
He holds the balm that can atone;
So ask not WHY?

Oh! weep not that those withered flowers,
Alone remain of happier hours,
You culled them once in Summer bowers,
But ask not WHY?

Those suffering years are not in vain,
He marks the throb of every pain;
Your present loss is future gain,
When you'll know WHY.

God lives, and loves, and plans your way,
Commit it fully, day by day,
To Him, your Portion and your Stay;
And ask not WHY?

The Evangelical Alliance.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE AT BOURNEMOUTH.

SINCE its organization half a century ago, the Evangelical Alliance has endeavoured to give public expression to that living union which binds true believers in the fellowship of Christ. In the furtherance of this object the annual conferences have played an important part, and the union of Christians has been promoted by fraternal and devotional intercourse; strife and division have been discouraged, and upon God's children has been impressed a deeper sense of the great duty of seeking the full accomplishment of our Lord's prayer—"That they all may be one . . . that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me."

Besides fostering this spirit among its adherents, the Alliance has sought the general advancement of evangelical religion, the counteraction of error and infidelity, the defence of religious liberty, the strengthening and support of the persecuted in all lands, and the initiation of various enterprises of direct Gospel work wherever possible. It is not surprising, therefore, that the organization should commend itself to Christians of every denomination, or that its annual Conference should be so largely attended. At this year's assembly, held at Bournemouth last week, members, delegates, and friends were present from all parts of the United Kingdom, and some even from the Continent.

TUESDAY.

At the reception on Tuesday afternoon, in Shaftesbury Hall, Sir MATTHEW DODSWORTH presided, and among those who wrote regretting their inability to be present were the Bishop of Durham (Dr. H. C. G. Moule), the Bishop of Sodor and Man, and Dr. D. McEwan. The first words of welcome were spoken by Rev. E. J. KENNEDY (vicar of Boscombe), who said that the Evangelical section of the Established Church, with Nonconformists, were anticipating from the Conference a reflex blessing. He heartily appreciated the privilege of standing side by side with ministers of other denominations. Through the absurd differences which divide the Church to-day, such opportunities were few.

The Congregationalists were represented by Rev. J. D. JONES. In recognizing the valuable work of the Alliance, he said there was more and more a need for Christian men and women to cease from recrimination and strife, and to unite in one attack on the common foes of the human race. Union in this direction will be promoted by emphasizing the word "evangelical." Rev. G. D. HOOPER said that for a successful conference three things were needed: (1) God-sent messengers; (2) a united testimony, in spite of all differences, and without the sacrifice of conviction [or the loss of personal independence; and (3) a receptive town. Hearty words of welcome were also spoken by Rev. H. B. CLOUGH (Wesleyan) and Rev. R. BROOK-LANDER. On behalf of the Alliance, Dr. BAEDEKER and Rev. F. B. MEYER responded in appreciative terms.

THE UNITY OF THE BODY OF CHRIST.

The chairman in the evening was Rev. E. J. KENNEDY, and in introducing the subject set down for consideration, "The Unity of the Body of Christ," pointed out the distinction between union and unity. It is possible to have the former without the latter. Unity implies communion—union does not. In Christian work mechanical union is not sufficient; there must be spiritual unity.

The first address was given by Rev. G. S. BARRETT, D.D., who dealt with the theme in a serious and impressive spirit. He pointed out the import of Christ's words, "There shall be one fold and one Shepherd," which implied that there should be but one flock. How many times have these words been used to favour the idea that the Church of Christ will be one in outward organization! Our Lord says nothing of this, but declares that there shall be one flock and one shepherd. One flock may shelter in one or many folds. So with the Church of Christ. However varied may be her outward appearance, in the deepest sense of the word she is already one. Therefore the unity of the Church is independent of its own recognition of it. Answering his own question whether it is desirable for the Church of Christ to become one in outward organization, Dr. Barrett said he could not think that to become one would promote the health of the whole. So long as human nature is what it is, men will find their ecclesiastical domiciles in varied forms of Church government. The unity of the inward life of the Church is sure to manifest itself in a diversity of outward forms. In nature there is only one real life, yet infinite varieties of outward existence. As in nature so it is in grace. Uniformity is only to be found in death; it must be sought not in the Church, but in the churchyard. But it does not follow that endless divergences and multitudes of divisions will be for the highest good of the Church. Variety must have its limits. The endless divisions in the Church are a weakness to Christianity, and a reproach to Christian life. There ought to be room enough in all the Evangelical churches in England for those who call themselves followers of Jesus Christ. The Church should seek to diminish rather than increase its ecclesiastical divisions.

Rev. F. B. MEYER followed with timely and practical words on the same subject. There was something delightful, he felt, in the word "body." It tells that while Christ dwells on high He still moves on the earth's surface. Through his body, the Church, He is still doing his wonderful acts, and speaking his marvellous words. God carries out his highest purposes in this world through men, and through the members of his Church. Christ is yearning over men and working his great miracles. Speaking of the genesis of the body of Christ, Mr. Meyer reminded his hearers that when the Saviour, as Head of the Church, was raised in great power and glory to his Father's right hand, the Holy Spirit came down and began to work mightily, adding men, not to the Church, not to one another, but to Christ. So on the day of Pentecost the Spirit began to add men to Christ, and has continued through the intervening ages; and it is because the members of the Church have been primarily added to their Head that they have been added to one another. Passing to the obligations of the followers of Christ, the speaker urged the importance of (1) discerning the Lord's body, (2) speaking the truth in love, (3) listening with patience to the truth from others, whatever may be their ecclesiastical upbringing, and (4) following the admonition of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthians, and drinking of the one Spirit.

WEDNESDAY.

The Conference on Wednesday turned to the consideration of the varied expressions of the basis on which the Alliance rests.

THE SPIRIT IN THE WORD.

At the morning gathering Rev. J. D. JONES presided, and, in a few words, introduced the subject of the addresses—"The Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures: the Spirit in the Word"—and said the great battle of to-day rages round our Scriptures. We are face to face with a two-fold attack upon the Word of God. The work of many of the critics is an attack upon the authority of the Bible. But criticism can never affect in the slightest degree the inspiration of Scripture. When the Word itself is studied its inspiration is self-evident. Then there is the reaction from the attack of the critics in the attempt which is being made to withdraw the Bible from private persons. This, without doubt, is the most insidious attack ever made upon the Protestantism of our country.

Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, in a vigorous address, defended the authority and inspiration of Scripture. He pointed out that the oracles of God meant a revelation from God. Christians did not merely claim that the Scriptures possess beautiful truths, but the Word of God is separated from all other literature by a deep and wide difference. Its inspiration is much more than the inspiration of individual writers. The Bible is a realization of a Divine purpose. We admit freely that there is truth in other literature. There were earnest seekers after truth among Pagan nations, who were frequently rewarded by happy findings of golden ore; but with this there was found to be dross, and their writings lacked the dynamic power which Scripture contains. In other sacred writings man seeks God, but in the Bible God seeks man. This Divine purpose is evident in the beautiful harmony of the Scriptures as a whole. In every true sermon—wherever the text may be taken from—Christ will be preached, for the New Testament lies hidden in the Old, and the Old Testament is not treated rightly if it is not made to open out the teachings of the New. With all this variety of material, writers, and conditions, there is a wonderful harmony, and Jesus Christ is the one theme of the whole book. Another characteristic of the Bible is progress without imperfection. This is also true of God's work in nature. True religion is as perfect in Genesis as it is in the last chapter of Revelation. Not only is the Bible the realization of Divine purpose, but it proceeds from a Divine source. No prophecy ever came by will of man, but men spoke from God, being moved by the Holy Ghost. In the inspiration of Scripture there was a sense of a Divine commission, a conviction of Divine assistance in preparation, and a Divine oversight which led to the spiritual elevation of the writers. There was also a Divinely-wrought assurance in the hearts of the people to whom the Word was addressed, that it was from God.

An impressive address on the reverence due to God's Word was given by Rev. F. B. MEYER. He was glad to know that what in his judgment has been a mistake is now happily being corrected by some of the higher critics, who are showing that inspiration is a quality in the Book which can be distinguished and ascertained by every holy soul for itself. The most wonderful thing about the Bible is that it brings to the heart of the believer the very life that throbs in the heart of God. It brings into our souls a sense of the Eternal, with comfort to our hearts; and deals with the deepest questions of morality in a way that causes men to hate that which is impure and yearn for that which is pure.

THE TRINITY IN UNITY.

The afternoon session was devoted to the consideration of "The Trinity in Unity." The proceedings were under the direction of Rev. R. BROOK-LANDER, who briefly referred to the numerous illustrations which have been used to present the mystery of the Trinity. He felt that he could never forget how the whole tenor of his life was changed when there dawned upon his soul the consciousness that the Holy Spirit was not a mere influence, but a Person who could take hold of him as with a human grasp to control, guide, and use him. The first address was given by Rev. Dr. ELDER CUMMING. Taking as the central thought for his discourse, "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. xxviii. 19), he gave a helpful exposition of numerous passages in both the Old and New Testament bearing upon the mystery of the unity of the Godhead. He pointed out that the Bible is not a series of statements of science that can be laid aside at will. The Bible gives to the human mind facts and truths, leaving to the people of God the task of forming a system of theology out of them. The doctrine of the unity of the Godhead is the fundamental truth of Scripture. The Bible was for a long time the only quarter where this great truth was laid down. Its one great declaration ever to be remembered and never to be mistaken, is that there is but one God. In false systems of religion there is something like a mimicry of the doctrine of the Trinity set forth; but the heart of the teaching of the whole Trinity is. "God so loved the world that He gave his only Son." If there were no unity in the Trinity God could not have given his Son. The Old Testament, or Jewish system, was knowing God as one: the Christian system represents the knowledge of the Three in One.

Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, in an impressive address, dealt with the subject of "The Witness to the Unity of the Godhead." Such witness, he declared, was two-fold, and is to be found in the inner realm of the conscience and reason, and in God's working in Providence and history. The power which holds the universe is a single power. But the argument from philosophy fails. It may convince the intellect of man, but never wins his heart. Proceeding to consider the witness of Scripture to this unity, Mr. Webster pointed out that Jesus Christ did not endorse the idea prevalent at the present day—that a man ought not to believe what he could not understand. God could only be known by faith. We cannot understand the existence of body, soul, and spirit, and without faith we cannot understand the unity of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. The testimony of Jesus Christ is a reasonable basis for the exercise of faith; and when faith is thus exercised it receives an abundant reward, and man has in his own soul the witness of the Spirit which seals his faith, and forms an additional testimony to the unity of the Godhead.

AN EVANGELISTIC APPEAL.

Much earnest prayer had been offered in view of the meeting of Wednesday evening, which took the form of an evangelistic service. As a result of much loving effort, many strangers were to be seen in the audience, and the gathering was marked by true evangelical fervour. Rev. G. D. Hooper was in the chair, and made a few remarks introductory to the subject set down for meditation—"The Deity, Incarnation, and Atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ." Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence gave a forcible and suggestive address on this momentous phase of Christian doctrine. No language, he felt, could do justice to the stupendous claim of Christ to be co-equal with God. Appealing to the Word of God, he gave a thoughtful exposition of passages expressing the relationship of Father and Son. The acknowledgment of Christ Himself was—"He that believeth my words, and believeth Him that sent Me, hath eternal life." Christ's knowledge of God was perfect, and the relationship between Father and Son is the true type of the relationship between the Christian and God. He took human nature into his Deity on the one hand, and on the other makes man a partaker of the Divine. From Calvary's Cross there streamed the words: "God is love." The curse of the law was there; satisfaction was needed and met.

Mr. John Wood, secretary of the Evangelization Society, followed with some impressive words, and made an impassioned appeal to any who had not accepted Christ, to yield themselves unreservedly to Him.

THURSDAY.

The attendance on the last day of the Conference was equal to that of the preceding days, and the interest in the proceedings was sustained to the end. At the morning gathering, the Chairman (Rev. H. B. Clough) in his opening remarks referred to the varied forms in which evil flaunts itself on every hand. There are times when hope almost dies within the heart of the Christian, as he realizes the strength of the forces with which he has to contend. At such times it is for the servants of Christ to remember that, while human words could not transform men's lives, there is One who is sufficient for these things, and the voice may still be heard, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts," shall these things for which thou art praying, come to pass.

REGENERATION AND CONVERSION.

The first address was given by Dr. Elder Cumming, and dealt with "The Work of the Holy Spirit in Regeneration and Conversion." Selecting as the basis of his discourse the words "Born of the Spirit," the speaker recalled the challenge of Nicodemus—"How can a man be born when he is old?" Christ did not explain further than by saying that the birth in question was a real one, to which there was attached a deep mystery. It was a birth from above of which God the Holy Ghost was the author. "The new birth" means that the spiritual life of a man begins. It is not a mere outward change; it is not the evil man becoming totally reformed — a respectable member of society. Paul said, "Neither circumcision nor uncircumcision availeth." Being a Jew could not secure it; being uncircumcised could not prevent it. And no member of any church takes away the regeneration of a man. Neither is it a mere change of a man's mental view and position, nor a mere change of character. The regeneration is far more than a change of society, character, and creed. It means that a new life has come into man, as real as the life of the body—the new life of the spirit. A new moment has come in which that life begins, called, in the nearest approach that language can make, the new birth. The work of the Holy Ghost is not from without but from within, and also through the Word of God, affecting every part of the being of man. It begins with his spirit, extending to the reaches of his intellect, clarifying all its judgment; touches his imagination, that most dangerous faculty, often the last to be sanctified; it regulates the passions and ambitions, and especially deals with the habits, and affects the conscience. There can be nothing more beautiful than the work of the Holy Spirit in the believer, gradually changing the whole man, and leading him to take his place on the side of God. Individual manhood is only perfect when it is created anew in Christ Jesus.

Telling and practical words were spoken by Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence on the subject of "The Work of the Holy Spirit in Sanctification." He felt that the greatest hindrance to the progress of the Gospel is to be found within the Church. The question which every Christian should face to-day is, Am I living a life which is bringing honour to the Master? The work of the Holy Ghost is too often negatived by the apathy of Christians. He proceeded to speak of the work of the Spirit in equipping men and women for service in the world, and gave a helpful exposition of the doctrine of sanctification which embodies power, perception, purity, and perseverance, urging his hearers to be obedient to the light they had received through the Holy Ghost.

THE WORK OF THE ALLIANCE.

Thursday afternoon was entirely taken up with a review of the operations of the Evangelical Alliance, principally during the past year. Rev. E. L. Burrows, who presided, pointed out that the Alliance exists not only to encourage united prayer, but also to make practical efforts in the spread of the Gospel, believing that prayer without work is presumption, and labour without prayer, infidelity.

Rev. E. J. Kennedy rejoiced that the Alliance had taken for one of the planks of its platform advocacy of the due observance of the Lord's Day. It forms one of the ministries of that righteousness that exalts a nation, for history provides abundant proof of the fact that moral deterioration of the people inevitably follows a country's desecration of the Sabbath. The injunction to keep holy the seventh day was not only thundered on Sinai, but was also whispered in Paradise. Referring to the advantages of keeping the Sabbath, the speaker set forth the physical, moral, and spiritual benefits which accrue from a right use of the Day of Rest. He lamented the growing tendency of the age to employ its sacred hours in pleasure, and affectionately appealed for individual and united effort to check the encroachments which threaten to frustrate the design and purpose of Him who bestowed this boon upon the human race.

"The King's Declaration" was the subject dealt with by Mr. W. H. Seagram. This matter, he declared, is one of vital importance to the community as a whole, for it is the sheet anchor of the Protestant constitution. The controversy was not with Roman Catholics as individuals, but the Alliance resented the concessions that had been made, and the endeavour to remove that most important pillar of the Protestant succession, rendering it possible for a Roman Catholic to ascend the Throne. Some secret agents have been expelled from Roman Catholic countries, and coming to England are buying property in all directions and establishing their institutions. Recognising the clouds that were arising on every side, the Alliance felt the Word of God was the only weapon that could stem the tide of sacerdotalism, idolatry, and infidelity that threatens to flood our country.

The great international conferences organized by the Alliance formed the subject of an address by Dr. Baedeker. He gave a glowing description of the results of these gatherings on the Continent, the outcome of which has been the quickening and deepening of religious life, the extension of missionary and evangelistic operations, the spread of Sunday schools, and the formation of many new and important agencies now in active operation. He paid a grateful tribute to the devotion of the late Miss von Weling, and the wonderful results of her untiring labours in Luther's Land. In Bohemia, and throughout Austria, the cry is ascending, "Oh, to be freed from Rome!" The spirit of inquiry for truth has spread also to Russia, and the Slavic race is springing into newness of life.

The general secretary (Mr. E. P. Field) spoke of the efforts of the Alliance on behalf of persecuted Christians in many lands. These efforts commenced in 1849, when the Madiai were sentenced to imprisonment for life for the crime of possessing and reading the Scriptures in a Roman Catholic country. As a result of prayer and effort on the part of the Alliance, the sentence of imprisonment was commuted to one of banishment, and the lives of these beloved and afflicted brethren were spared. During the last fifty years God has from year to year owned the endeavours of the organization for the relief of pain and sorrow, and the deliverance from oppression, imprisonment, and death of their fellow believers. The secretary also referred to the case of the Nestorians who tramped on foot the entire width of Europe to find their way to London to relate their tale of distress; and spoke of the violent outbreak of Roman Catholic bigotry in Portugal, when the seven principal Protestant congregations in Lisbon had their meetings stopped by the police, and two of the leaders imprisoned. The council of the Alliance appointed a deputation to wait upon the King of Portugal, who at the time was on a visit to England. His Majesty immediately sent orders to the police to cease all interference with the Protestant congregations, and promised that liberty of worship should be continued. Within the last fortnight religious freedom has been obtained at Brava, Cape Verde Islands, through the instrumentality of the Alliance.

THE DECISIVE MOMENT.

The closing meeting of the Conference was a notable gathering, and will be long remembered. A number of the workers spent half-an-hour in the streets with a view to constraining outsiders to attend, and as a result the spacious hall was nearly filled. The practical and momentous subject set down on the programme was "Justification by Faith Alone." The chairman (Rev. R. Hughes), in a few earnest words, set forth the doctrine as a message of the love of God to the universal need of the human heart.

The closing address, by Pastor W. Y. Fullerton, was a forcible appeal for personal surrender to the claims of Christ. Speaking on the words—"They stumbled at that stumbling stone" (Rom. ix. 22), he pointed out the stumbling stone to the Jews was not Jesus as a man or as the Messiah, but Christ crucified. It was not only Christ crucified, but Christ preached as the righteousness of God, which is the meaning of justification by faith. Many to-day, he declared, are stumbling over the same stone, because of the idea that men have a righteousness among themselves, and in consequence they cannot conceive of any other righteousness. Others stumble because the doctrine of justification by faith brings everybody to the same level. There is still a great deal of caste in religion; but the righteousness of God comes to every man whatever may be his position. Others could not receive this doctrine because it excludes human boasting. Virtue to be perfect must exclude all self-praise.

As the speaker proceeded to emphasize familiar truthsh, is hearers were deeply impressed, and his final appeal, made in solemn and searching words, found a response in many hearts, and in all parts of the hall hands were raised signifying willingness to enter into the fulness of the justifying grace of God.

The Indian Famine.

WRITING under date November 8, Rev. Dennis Osborne says:—"In some parts famine has already developed. The Deccan Herald states that famine is impending in Behar on account of the failure of rains. The bhadoi crops are almost ruined, and the prospects of the rabi crops are very gloomy. The localities indicated are in Bengal, and are among the most densely populated sections. This dearth cannot but affect millions. A still more urgent cry comes from the North-West. Rev. J. C. Lawson writes to the effect that in a large section of country acute famine prevails. Here, in Poona, a severe recrudescence of plague is laying the inhabitants low. Our streets are becoming deserted, and the people are fleeing from their homes."

AS BAD AS IN 1899!

In the course of an interesting letter from the Irish Mission, Paranti, Rev. J. Sinclair Stevenson writes: "Having just returned to India after a few months at home, it has come upon me with a shock to find what a serious state of things prevails in the Northern half at least of the Bombay Presidency, the district occupied by the Irish Presbyterian Mission to which I belong. Over large tracts of country we are face to face with famine conditions as bad as in 1899. This is no mere private view, but the deliberately expressed opinion of Government officials in the districts concerned. These include, among others, the Bhil country, the Northern States of Gujarat, and practically the whole of Kathiawar. Although the rainy season is only just over, the water has almost disappeared from the tanks and all but the larger rivers. The danger of a water famine seems much greater than in 1889. This would be likely to greatly increase the mortality arising from pestilence and sickness, such as always accompanies famine, beside making it more difficult to make suitable arrangements."

INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

Mr. James Smith writes from Ahmedabad:—"Your readers will be encouraged to learn that about fifty famine orphans have already learned rug-making in my industrial school, and are now earning their own living in the factory of the 'Indian Mission Industries, Limited,' at Ahmednagar. Fifty others are nearly ready for the factory, and more than 150 more are learning the same industry in my school. Besides the rug-making, we are teaching tailoring, metal-work and wood-work. Our teaching staff numbers twelve teachers in the industrial department alone, under the superintendence of Mr. D. C. Churchill, from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston. We have hundreds of orphans on our hands for whom we need support. Most of them are too young to earn their living at a trade, so we are training them in order of seniority. I am told that nowhere is the standard of instruction so high."

British Guiana.—Among other efforts for the amelioration of the coloured population of British Guiana, Rev. H. J. Shirley (formerly minister of Fulham Congregational Church) has established a newspaper in the interests of his work. The first issue of The People, which has just reached us, gives promise of much usefulness in the colony.

Soldiers at Poona.

AMONG the many branches of the work of Christ in operation for the advancement of his kingdom in India, not the least is the Soldiers' Mission in Poona. Poona is one of the numerous garrison towns of India, and is the headquarters of the Army in the Bombay Presidency. The British Government maintain a military force of two full regiments, and four batteries of Artillery, which include about 3,000 British troops, besides about 4,000 native troops.

The Soldiers' Mission in its present form was commenced about two years ago by Mr. and Mrs. N. Dannefoerd. Some two or three years before that, they went to India from New Zealand, believing the Lord had called them to work among soldiers, and since then they have steadily and consistently followed up this line of service, and the Lord has graciously owned their labours by numerous and marked tokens of his blessing.

On first arrival, they began by visiting the barracks and hospitals, speaking personally with the men to whom they gained access, inviting them to Gospel services, holding meetings specially for soldiers in the Barrack Prayer-rooms provided for such purposes, under the auspices of the Soldiers' Christian Association, of which Mr. Dannefoerd is the local secretary. As time went on they found the Lord was encouraging them most graciously, and it became evident to them that the peculiar circumstances of the soldier's life needed more particular attention and care. After much prayer and waiting on God, they were led to take a house suitable for the purpose, and open therein a Christian Missionary Home for soldiers in the outskirts of Poona. Cheerful rooms were thrown open to the soldiers, where they can spend the time they are off duty. The rooms are open on Sundays and weekdays alike. Refreshments are provided at cost price, so as to avoid any occasion for going to public refreshment-rooms. Bible readings are regularly held for those who desire them, and Gospel addresses are given every evening. The Lord has blessed this work to the salvation of many souls ever since it was commenced.

The Christian men encourage others to come, and can promise them a pleasant change from the barracks, with bright surroundings such as they greatly appreciate, and a kind, homely welcome. The writer has stayed at the Mission home and is intimately acquainted with the working, and with the Lord's dear servants who have undertaken it. Every detail that has been mentioned is solely a means to one end ever in view, namely, a systematic Evangelical missionary work among the British troops on the station.

Praise and thanksgiving go up to God as one witnesses a company of bright, happy, eager young men assembled for a Bible reading in a quiet side room—most of them recently saved from a reckless and godless life, and owing their salvation to the precious blood of Christ. Besides this, several of the officers visiting the Mission have testified to personal blessing received there, and have heartily contributed to its support. When regiments are changed, those who have gained a knowledge of the Saviour go to other parts, often at a great distance, and become witnesses for Christ in their turn.

As branch secretary of the Soldiers' Christian Association in Poona and Kirkee, Mr. Dannefoerd still holds meetings in the Barrack Prayer-rooms at Wanowri, Ghorpuri, and Kirkee. He also regularly visits in turn the four military hospitals on the station and the prison. Mrs. Dannefoerd holds meetings for the women and children. Letters have been received by Mr. Dannefoerd urging him to commence similar homes for soldiers in other military stations.

Although there are many missions which justly call for the sympathy and support of the people of God, we believe there are still those of God's children who are glad to know of sound, faithful Gospel work in which they may happily and heartily co-operate, and to those we commend this work in the Lord's name.

I shall be glad to give any further information regarding the work. Copies of the monthly circular letter may be had on application to Mr. N. Dannefoerd, Soldiers' Mission, Sollyflood Road, Poona, Bombay, India.

SOLDIERS AND THEIR FRIENDS AT POONA.

The Volunteers of America.

THE celebration of the sixth anniversary of the beginning of the work of this organization took place on November 12, in New York City. There was a very large audience, representing all denominations and all classes of the Christian community, which gave, when the collection was taken, the largest offering yet received in a meeting of this kind. The boxes themselves, and a pile of letters from people who could not come, showed that Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth have not only kept their wealthy friends who stood by them six years ago, but have added since to their number. The force of staff officers behind the leaders showed that the movement has enough vitality in itself to produce officers of even the highest grade from among its own converts and soldiers—this being, perhaps, the most powerful assurance of the permanence of the organization, and of its increasing usefulness in the future.

The Penetrating Glance.—God looks through our souls more clearly than we can through the air, and accurately discerns every mote and atom stirring there. —Bishop Hopkins.

Origin of a Revival.

THE great revival now in progress in Japan is a matter of world-wide interest, and should prove a stimulus to Christians everywhere to labour and pray with increased zeal and faith for the coming of Christ's kingdom upon earth. Its extent and power are the result of various circumstances which have combined to prepare the way for a work of grace which is certain to have an important influence on the future history of Japan, and will to a more or less extent be felt in Korea and China.

During several centuries past Confucianism has had a prominent place in the minds of the upper classes; but recent events in China have shown it to be deficient as a religious basis for an enlightened and progressive people. Hence the young and ambitious generation that is coming to the front, is looking for some other and better system of ethics than has been taught by Chinese sages and philosophers.

JAPANESE REASONINGS.

It has from time to time been urged by the opponents of Christianity that the teachings of the Bible are opposed to the spirit of loyalty and the development of a strong military power. But the results of the war between the United States and Spain have shown that the strongest nations and most loyal people are those who accept the Christian faith. The Japanese are thus convinced that in the Christian nations there is presented the highest and most perfect type of civilization. This has prepared their minds for the acceptance of the religion of the Bible.

The circulation of the Scriptures in such large numbers has had its effect upon the people generally, many of whom had not hitherto been identified with Christianity. During the period from 1874 to July, 1890, there were circulated, by the American Bible Society agency alone, a total of more than half-a-million copies of the Scriptures and portions of the same; and since that date the three Bible Societies working together (American, British and Foreign, and Scottish) have circulated upwards of 1,000,000 copies. So great is the present interest in the study of the Scriptures, that during the first three months of the present year the circulation was in excess of the total sales of the year 1898. The average sales of Rev. Mr. Snyder on the railroad trains has been between 500 and 600 copies of the Gospels daily; these books have been read with interest in order to ascertain what Christianity really is.

BIBLE READING ON A LARGE SCALE.

For a considerable number of years there has been a Scripture Readers' Union in Japan, which has numbered from 10,000 to 12,000 members, all of them pledged to read a certain portion of the Scriptures every day. A considerable number of the members were not Christians, but simply desired to know what the Bible teaches. Another helpful movement has been a method of Bible study by correspondence, which was instituted by Rev. Mr. Fulton, of Kanazawa. I do not know the present number of those who are being assisted in this way, but some nine months ago there were about 800. By this means this large number, and some of them secretly, are becoming acquainted with the teachings of the Bible.

In such a field, and with so much sowing of the Gospel seed, it is not strange that there should be important results. It is remarked by those who have been engaged in the revival services that have thus far been held, that a large portion of the converts have a greater or less knowledge of Scripture truth, and have thus been prepared for the special influences of the Holy Spirit to make it effectual in producing changed and holy lives. While there have been periods of diminished circulation and interest in the work of the Bible Societies in Japan, it is now evident that all this dissemination of God's Holy Word has had its effect. It is matter of assurance that what has already occurred is only the beginning of a work that is to be carried forward with increased zeal, and on a still larger scale. Let there be special and earnest prayer for its continued success.

A Chippawa Indian.

REV. ALLEN SALT.

IT gives me pleasure to furnish some particulars of the life and work of Rev. Allen Salt, a native missionary among the Chippawa Indians of Canada. I have known him for many years, and esteem him highly as a brother in the Lord. He is eighty-three years of age, and physically a stalwart, standing over six feet high.

Mr. Salt was born in paganism, but early in life was taken into the home of Rev. William Case, who was the first Methodist missionary among the Indians of Canada. His name was Ah-sho-say, which means "Flying Over." During his stay in the mission-school he acquired a fairly good education. On the death of Mrs. Case, he returned to his Indian life, and became famous as a hunter of wild game such as bears, deer, and wolves.

Allen Salt dates his conversion from a visit to the newly-formed mission at Alderville, where a number of happy converted Indians were accustomed to meet to worship the Great Spirit whom, under religious instruction, they had come to know as their reconciled and loving Heavenly Father. I give you his own words in reference to his conversion, which to him was a truly conscious reality:—

I was converted at Alderville in a class meeting. I felt a powerful influence from above resting upon my head, and then upon my whole body, so that I had to sit down upon the floor. After the Indians' prayers, I felt I loved the people so much that I went around the room and shook hands with my fellow natives.

This simple recital of the way in which the love of God was shed abroad in his heart in answer to his believing prayer, is very much in harmony with that of many others, which it has been our joy to witness. From that hour Allen Salt became a true follower of the Lord Jesus, who had thus blessedly filled him with his love. At first he was employed as a school teacher among the Indians. Such, however, were his gifts, as well as graces, that it was not long before he was urged to go out as a missionary among his people. For a time he refused, feeling, as he says, "not fit for such a great work." Afterwards being taken ill, he prayed thus: "Lord, if Thou wilt spare my life a while longer, I will not refuse should I be called again to go and preach the Gospel—even though I might be sent to the Hudson Bay Territory!"

In 1853, his missionary career began, and, strange to say, he was one of the first band of devoted toilers sent by his Church into the Hudson Bay Territories. For forty-eight years he has been a faithful, devoted missionary among his countrymen in various fields. His presence with us at the camp meeting last year, where over 1,000 Indians occupied 110 tents in the native forest, was a veritable benediction. As his picture shows, he is a pure Indian, but possessing what is so rare among his people, a beautiful white beard.

Mission Work at Mount Lebanon.

ONCE more Miss Louisa Procter has issued the annual report of her work among the children of the Mount Lebanon district. The record for the year is full of encouragement, and many will be gratified to hear that the boys' school was completed and opened free of debt. Fifty boys and four masters were soon settled. The girls' school has also been full. One woman was anxious to place her two daughters as boarders, and when she found that the school was full she took a room in the village, and sent her girls as day scholars. The school has secured a good name for the care taken of children, and the education given. Parents from many distant places are sending their children. The school fees have been raised, and last year £90 was received more than in any previous year.

The good position the school now holds, and the thorough methods of training, are attested by the report of a deputation from the Church Missionary Society. One of the two ladies who formed the deputation afterwards wrote to Miss Procter:—"Your work is a marvel. I can only wonder the more I look back upon what we saw. What you contrive to do yourself, and what you have trained others to do in your limited space, and with the means at your command, is simply wonderful. I learned so much from all I saw with you. The memory of it will be a very pleasant one always."

While the testimonies to material progress are numerous, signs are not wanting to prove that the spiritual life of the scholars is strong and deep. Shortly after the school year began, a Christian friend visited the institution and spoke of the Christian Endeavour movement; and the result was the formation of a branch in the girls' school. He spoke to them of the solemnity of the promise to be made, and warned them not to undertake it lightly. After prayer, fourteen came forward as members. The weekly meetings are conducted entirely by themselves, and they have their consecration Sunday once a month. Their leisure hours are spent in making useful and fancy articles, and by the sale of these they form a charity fund, out of which they are helping to support famine orphans in India.

Friends in England desiring with practical sympathy to cheer this devoted work may communicate with Mr. Thomas J. Knight, Bush Hill, Winchmore Hill, London, N.

Child Mortality.—Is it an essential of all so-called high civilization that there should be an increasing disregard of the value and sacredness of human life? Certainly the conditions of modern life, and the struggle for existence, which make real home life hardly possible to the lower sections of the working classes, put proper care of the child out of question; and creches, and other philanthropic institutions notwithstanding, a terrible infant mortality results. In one district of London, by no means an unhealthy one, the mortality of children under twelve months of age has reached the startling level of 162 per 1,000. That much of this waste of life is preventable is shown by the fact that in a Lancashire manufacturing town, where the rate was still higher, 174 per 1,000, the adoption of preventive measures resulted, in a very short time, in a reduction to 100. At Battersea the Borough Council are proposing measures "on business lines" in the endeavour to bring about a better condition of things, but the matter is rather one for consideration in Parliament, as in only too many of our manufacturing centres and large cities thousands of children are born but to die in their first year.

From Many Lands.

JAPANESE FACTORY GIRLS.

After two months of happy work in the North of Japan, Miss M. Laurence has gone to Osaka to carry on the work among factory girls inaugurated by Miss Holland, and carried on in the face of almost insurmountable difficulties. The prayers of our readers are invited on behalf of the effort.

A VISIT TO PATAGONIA.

Writing on the eve of a Bible-selling tour to Patagonia, Mr. Emilio Olsson (of Adrogue, Buenos Ayres) writes:—"My mission is most interesting. This Bible trip will be my first visit to and along the coast of Patagonia. I shall possibly reach Tierra del Fuego."

PORT SAID SEAMEN'S REST.

Mr. J. D. McGregor baptized eleven converts in the sea about seven weeks ago; and three other seamen had been previously dedicated to the Lord in this ordinance. Men of different languages have been reached, especially Arabs, Italians, and Greeks. Mr. and Mrs. Locke have now returned and taken over the work with fresh energy, after their change at home.

ZANZIBAR STRANGERS' REST.

Mrs. Knapman gives a most interesting and encouraging account of her work among the Arab ladies, who are as much shut in and secluded as the women in India, and to many of whom she has access.

Mr. Knapman also tells of good work among the young Arabs, who go regularly to the "Rest" for classes, and several of whom are earnest inquirers of the truth. The work among the sailors of Zanzibar has also much increased.

ON THE ASSAM FRONTIER.

Mr. J. Herbert Lorrain writes that the members of the Assam Frontier Pioneer Mission have been cheered by a visit from a Minyong Abor, who brought a goat from his mountain home, several days' journey distant, that he might give it as a thankoffering for the restoration of his son, to whom medicine was given some time ago. A tour has been planned through the villages of both the Bor and Minyong Abors, situated on the foot-hills of the Himalayas, with a view to taking up work in one of them as soon as the good will of the people and the necessary permission from the British Government can be obtained.

THE HEARING EAR IN BELGIUM.

About four months ago Monsieur Argaud settled in Tournai, the most important city in the province of Hainault, and commenced evangelistic work, which has proved remarkably successful. At each of the three weekly services his mission hall is overcrowded, and over fifty people are to be seen standing at the door. The seal of God's blessing has been very marked, and definite conversions have taken place. M. Argaud is anxious to raise £500 for a hall which is greatly needed, as the present one is small and unsuitable. Communications should be addressed to Mr. R. Argaud, 19, Placette aux Oignons, Tournai, Belgium.

ENCOURAGEMENT IN BRAZIL.

Reporting on their first year of work, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald J. Young, Largo da Liberdade, 62, Sao Paulo, S.P., Brazil, tell of 650 meetings; 21,956 visits have been made; 26,733 tracts scattered; 785 Bibles sold; 1,451 Testaments sold; 1,759 Gospels sold; 22,800 persons have listened to the preaching; thirty-seven have professed conversion; thirty-two have been baptized. The greater part of the Bible work represents the labours of Mr. Frederick C. Glass, who is considered the best colporteur in Brazil. "Thank God, with a few exceptions, the converts give unmistakable evidences of the new life. The addition has been rather slow, because we are determined by God's grace to do only honest and thorough work. God forbid that we should ever try to proselytize people from Popery to Protestantism! But let us bring sinners to the Saviour."

DISTRESS IN CRETE.

Miss D. Panagiotides, who went to Crete some months ago to carry the Gospel to the people, writes of much distress among the peasants. This is owing to a succession of bad harvests. It seems that in the late war numerous olive trees, one of the main sources of wealth in the island, were cut down or burned. Subsequent seasons of drought have not improved matters. Miss Panagiotides believes that one very practical way of helping the people would be to buy some of the work of the Cretan women, which she describes as quite original in design, and very pretty; some she has seen being of the nature of beautifully-worked towels. She also tells us that the Cretans are really open to the Gospel, and urges that now is the time to reach them before corrupt influences from other countries spoil their simplicity. Communications may be sent to Miss D. Panagiotides, Chanea, Crete.

POOR PRIESTS IN ROME.

Two years ago, "readers of The Christian" helped the Home Refuge for Converted Priests in Rome by gifts of clothing during the cold weather.

At the end of last month, one of the inmates of the Home wrote that the cold was already beginning to be felt, and that warm garments would be gratefully accepted. Another, who is preparing to preach the Gospel to his fellow-countrymen, writes: "We Italian priests needed such a home as this. How many other priests there are in Italy to-day who, moved by the highest motives, would leave the Church of Rome if they only knew where they might take refuge from the persecutions of the Vatican! Thousands of them are hungry for the truth, and are crying to Christian people all over the world for help." While monks and nuns in numbers are coming just now to English shores, such words from Italy appeal to our hearts.

Requests for admittance are frequent, but comparatively few can be accepted. It would, however, be most desirable to be able to add more rooms to the Home. Indeed, one more has been taken in faith lately, so as to increase the number of those admitted from six to eight.

Gifts of clothing would be thankfully received by Rev. Dr. W. Burt, 38, Via Firenze, Rome (hon. secretary and treasurer in Italy), or by Miss Ward, Gottesruhe, Montalt Road, Woodford Green, Essex.

ZENANAS IN THE NIZAM'S DOMINIONS.

From Indur, in the Nizam's Dominions comes a marvellous challenge to Christian missions. A Hindu gentleman has offered to build a hospital for women on the finest site in the town, provided the Wesleyan Mission at work there will send a lady doctor, with her equipment of drugs and instruments. The funds of the women's branch of the mission are even now overdrawn; every penny of its ordinary income is claimed by existing work. Yet this Hindu pities the sufferings of the women and children about him, aggravated as they are by the barbarities of native practitioners. "We have had," writes Miss Anna M. Hellier, "dread glimpses of nameless horrors perpetrated in the zenanas. We know, too, what a splendid opportunity is now offered for preaching Christ.

"Five years ago we began a medical mission at Medak, another town in the same native State. What is the result? Instead of the bitter opposition which first met the lady doctors, the chief priest of the Mohammedans has himself become their champion, and says 'they hold the hearts of Medak in the hollow of their hand.' Two additional dispensaries have been built at populous village centres. During the last three months the attendance at the weekly Bible classes there has exceeded 4,000, and 5,800 patients have been treated. Hundreds of baptisms have been recorded during the year. We propose to raise a special fund of £850. This, we hope, will maintain the lady doctor and meet the working expenses of the hospital and the heavy cost of drugs for at least five years. Communications to Mrs. Wiseman, 25, Queen's Avenue, Muswell Hill, N.

Discharged Prisoners' Aid.

THE quondam chapel in Little Wild Street, with its fine interior, presented a bright outlook on Thursday evening last, on the occasion of the winter meeting of the St. Giles' Christian Mission. There was a good attendance of influential persons, many of whom hold important positions, or occupy high social stations. Mr. Loveland-Loveland, K.C., presided; Mr. Alderman T. V. Strong made a statement in regard to the work, and the Duchess of Bedford—who is a prison visitor—distributed the good-conduct prizes to a number of young people.

As a trustee Alderman Strong expressed gratitude to influential friends who were present, and thought that the prize-winners also deserved thanks; for many of them had done well—many had done nobly. Many things tended to create the juvenile offender, apart from natural depravity. Chief among these causes was the terrible overcrowding in the homes of the very poor, common decency being almost impossible, while there was no home comfort. The children of such homes passed their time in the streets; they became "rowdy," learned to beg and steal. For the most part, they were not taught a trade. The boys received into the Homes were made to work, and experience showed that many of them would grow up to become good and useful men. The Mission had been founded forty-two years, and the Homes for boys for fourteen years. These Homes had won the confidence of judges, magistrates, and prison authorities. They believed in the transforming power of Christianity, and belief in the power of the Gospel was the secret of success. The Mission had grown, and had branches in various parts of London, one of considerable importance being at Maldon, in Essex, where destitute children were sheltered and trained, and where there was accommodation for convalescents, whether children or adults. Since 1877, 401,000 free breakfasts had been given to discharged prisoners; 104,000 had been helped with tools, clothing, or employment; 92,000 had signed the temperance pledge.

Letters of sympathy were received from the Marquis of Northampton, Mr. F. A. Bevan and others; and one from Mr. Henry, who has succeeded Sir Robert Anderson as Assistant Commissioner of Police, enclosing £50.

WHY CRIME DOES NOT DIMINISH.

The Chairman addressed himself to the question: What is the use of such an institution as the St. Giles' Christian Mission—is it doing any good? Distress could be ameliorated, but the people needed an organized mission to help them. Crime was ever to the fore; but that Mission struck at the root of crime by taking the young from bad associations and training them, while a helping hand was given to others. Why did not crime diminish? Because they had to deal with others who were not their own people—foreigners who came into the country. In a recent calendar a fifth part of the offenders were foreigners. That was a matter difficult to deal with; but sooner or later some check would have to be put on immigrant foreigners. Mr. Wheatley testified with gratitude that chaplains and governors of prisons, as well as police authorities and employers of labour, had furthered the cause. The firms which took the boys now numbered 183, and the lads' earnings during the year had amounted to £1,563.

Sir Robert Anderson, LL.D., moved a resolution, having reference to the blessing of God which has attended the work of the St. Giles' Mission. He alluded to the objections raised against such work by statisticians; but statistics might mean the most silly superstition in the world. A large proportion of the boys taken were reclaimed. It was work which concerned itself with individuals; and the secret of success was dealing in detail. As a question of policy, the public would do well to put their money into the work, for if a little was not paid in that way, more would have to be paid in supporting prisons and prisoners. Mr. W. R. McConnell, K.C., and Lieut.-Col. Arthur Rotton, J.P.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, December 8. Hebrews viii.

SUCH a High Priest! There was never his like. He sits—the sign of finished work—at the right hand of the throne—i.e., where the energy of the Most High is ever going forth to save and bless. But though He sits, He ministers, and presents both gifts and sacrifices on the behalf of each penitent and believing soul.

When we are accepted of God through the mediation of our High Priest, we must build on the pattern as shown us in the Mount of Fellowship. All things must be according to the pattern. God has a distinct plan or purpose for each of us, and while we yield ourselves to Him, obeying Him as the minute details of life open one by one, we shall find at the end of life that we have fulfilled the Divine purpose. To some the whole pattern is revealed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, as a pathway through the night is revealed to the wayfarer by a flash of lightning. In other cases, we only learn God's pattern as events slowly unravel it. And when God's pattern is obeyed, the material is always forthcoming.

As to the new covenant, ponder well its provisions. The last is the most precious to those convinced of sin—that God forgets sin, though He never forgets the sinner. "When he was yet a great way off, the Father saw him." Oh, shelter here, trembling soul. "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us."

MONDAY, December 9. Hebrews ix.

The veil, hanging dark and thick before the Holy of Holies, was an apt symbol of the first dispensation. It hid almost as much as it revealed, and there was a perpetual warning addressed to all earnest seekers that the way into the Holiest Fellowship of God was not made manifest. It might be trodden by a few elect souls, but it was not manifest to all.

All this is altered now. We have eternal redemption; that is, we have the reality, the perfect love of God coming out of eternity to meet our sins with its balm and salve. We may receive into our inner hearts the eternal Spirit, who wrought in our Lord unto his death, and is prepared to work in us all. We receive our share of the eternal inheritance.

Are we satisfied to worship in the outer court, content with the externals of the heavenly realities, the husks from which the kernel has departed? Or, do we know what it is to pass beyond the mere form and ritual to the heavenly things themselves?

The Lord Jesus is now appearing before the face of God for us. He appeared once to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself; and He will appear the second time unto salvation. We live between two advents, two appearances. But how dissimilar their circumstances! May God at least grant us patience that we may look for Him, as many watched and waited for Him at the first (Luke ii. 38), that we may not be ashamed before Him at his coming.

TUESDAY, December 10. Hebrews x.

Throughout this chapter the contrast is continued between the imperfection of the Mosaic, and the glorious completeness of the Christian, dispensation. Notice the phrases, "the same sacrifices year by year," "a remembrance year by year," "every priest standeth day by day ministering"; then notice on the other side, "once for all," "one sacrifice for sins for ever," "perfected for ever." In the one is repetition denoting transitoriness and inefficiency; in the other finality, and therefore permanence.

Compare the phrase, "We have been sanctified . . . once for all" (10), which refers to the one act of Calvary, by which Christ set apart for special use and service the entire Church which He has redeemed; with the duplicate phrase, "Them that are being sanctified" (14), which refers to our growing apprehension of the great purpose which filled our Saviour's heart, and our growing conformity to his ideal. What incentives are thus presented to us to enter into fellowship with God! Notice the three resolves to which we are urged—"Let us draw near"—live in fellowship with God; "Let us hold fast"—continue in patience and perseverance; "Let us consider one another"—our love must embrace the weakest and most needy of our fellow-believers.

If a man apostatises from Christ (and there was some fear that these Hebrew believers were in danger of doing this), there is nothing else for him to flee to. If a Jew gave up Judaism, with its sacrifices, there was the supreme sacrifice of the cross to shelter him; but if a Christian should give up the sacrifice of Christ, and trample His blood under foot, there is literally nothing in front, no shelter, no hiding-place, no propitiation.

WEDNESDAY, December 11. Hebrews xi.

Let us walk along the picture gallery of faith, over the entrance of which is written the august definition that faith gives substance to things hoped for, and is the test of those things not seen (R.V. marg.). In making the decisions of life, a man of the world takes into consideration certain great facts which are patent to his judgment, intellect, and sense, and upon these he forms his conclusions; but the believer is certified as to the existence of many other facts which are hidden from all beside. These are as real to him as the coast-line to the experienced captain, who cannot indeed see the coast because of the mist that veils it; but he knows that the wall of rock is yonder, and in steering his vessel he takes it into account. In addition to what men of this world see, faith gives substance to the unseen and the eternal, while God is ever bearing witness to faith from the unseen (verses 2, 4, 5, 7, 16).

Strong faith is consistent with very differing views as to religious truth. The conception that Abel, Enoch, or Noah had of Christian doctrine was very slight; but the faith with which they held the scanty truth revealed to them was mighty, soul-transforming, and world-moving. It is not the amount of knowledge you have in your mind, but the firm grasp of your soul on the living God, which makes you one of the great army of faith. Women believed as well as men, judges as well as patriarchs and kings, those who lived in the world's dawn, and they who in its meridian suffered grievous things for the Christ who was to be revealed. Faith is God-capacity. It is a power by which we take God into our nature, and a new unit of being is constituted, in which God and man co-operate, and all things become possible to him that believeth, because God is in him and he in God.

THURSDAY, December 12. Hebrews xii.

In Raphael's pictures, clouds, when looked at minutely, are seen to be composed of cherub-faces; and those who have already witnessed and suffered for God gather around us as a great cloud, as the multitudes in the amphitheatre of old. We are still in the arena, and probably every blow and sigh are wrought and borne within clear view of the general assembly and Church of the First-born. What an incitement to lay aside all "cumbrance," for a thing which is not exactly sin may be a weight encumbering our progress; and to put away from us the sin of unbelief, which so easily besets us; as we constantly look off unto Jesus, who Himself is the great model of faith.

The word our, which precedes faith, should be eliminated (2). Jesus began and finished his course by the same faith, "the faith of the Son of God," which each of his children, though in smaller measure, is called upon to exercise. To Him, as to so many more of God's saints, there opened on the one hand the door into joy and happiness, as when He stood upon the Transfiguration Mount; and on the other hand there was the shadowed vista which led to the Cross. But He turned from the one, and instead of it ("for") took the way of Calvary, because He knew that beyond the grave there lay the vast multitude which no man could number, the certain harvest of his tears and blood.

Do not look upon your sorrow and pain as punishment, dear child of God—the punishment of your sins has been once and for ever borne by the Redeemer—but meekly bear the chastening of your Father. Try to learn the lesson of his rod. It may be that so soon as you have truly put away the evil thing which grieves your Father's heart, the long chastening may come to an end. The scourging will cease when the lesson is acquired.

Oh, that none of us may fall short of the grace of God (14)! Let us take care lest for one moment of evil gratification we lose the birthright of being priests and kings; for moments come in all lives when we cannot alter the destiny which our own act has involved. We may be forgiven, but we cannot undo. A Christian man may be forgiven some terrible act of immorality, but he never can get back the influence that he has squandered.

Already we have come to Mount Zion. As Lady Powerscourt said, "The believer's home is in heaven, where he resides, whence he comes down to do his day's work, and whither he returns." We belong to a city that cannot be removed, whence we can look out with calm confidence on all the shocks of earthquake that rend the world.

These practical exhortations to the ethics of Christian life follow on the doctrines of this noble Epistle.

Thrice the writer refers to those who bore office and rule in the Church (7, 17, 24). Twice he bids his readers Remember (3, 7). He urges to generosity (2), purity (4), contentment (5), good courage (6). He calls to a holy crusade. It is not for us, he cries, to linger in circumstances of ease and self-indulgence, when our Master has suffered without the gate. Let us go forth unto Him, bearing his reproach. Have we heard and obeyed that clarion-call? Has not the Church too long and too idly tarried in the city with its charms and blandishments, instead of influencing it from without. You may talk as you will about influencing men by dwelling among them. Probably Lot talked thus when he became one of the city magnates in Sodom. It is quite true that we have to be in the world, as its light and salt. But we need to walk very closely with God, if Sodom shall not deteriorate our character, put velvet on our lips, and nullify our influence for good. The Church has always been strongest when she has been the Church of the wilderness.

Be of good cheer! The God of Peace brought from the dead the Shepherd, and He will bring the flock; and the power of the resurrection is perfecting (i.e., adjusting) us, so that the will of God may be wrought in and through us for his good pleasure.

SATURDAY, December 14. James i.

This Epistle has al lthe characteristics of the Hebrew-Christian school of thought, which had as its centre the Holy City, and refused to be influenced by that wider contact with the Gentile world, which so powerfully affected the conceptions and teachings of the Apostle Paul. The characteristics of the Jerusalem church were severe and strait, and lay in the direction of righteousness, purity, and profound veneration for the ancient Hebrew code with its morals and manners. James, the author, "the Lord's brother" (Gal. i. 19), was held in high respect by Jew and Gentile.

The chapter abounds in strong, clear teaching. Let patience be perfected. Let prayers be offered in faith. Let men take interest in the circumstances of their fellows. Let them watch against unholy desires, and receive God's gifts with thankfulness. Above all, let there be more doers than talkers, more deeds than words.

But the imagery is as beautiful as it is chaste. The surge of the sea, tossed and driven before the gale! The graceful fashion of the flower of the grass, which does not prevent its fading! The course of the Father of lights, which has no parallax, and casts no shadow! The swiftness with which men forget their faces, after they have regarded themselves in the mirror!

Let us not be content with looking at ourselves in God's Word, but do what we are bidden. Notice the benediction on doing (25). Mark the test of genuine religion, in the bridled tongue (26). See to it that charity and purity are the two notes of your daily walk and conversation (27). F. B. M.

A Blind Chinese Boy.

By Rev. E. F. P. Scholes.

WHEN I was stationed in Hankow, about three years ago, I was going along the main street one day in the direction of my own home, when I noticed a crowd of people. On stopping to see what was the object of their interest, I was at once appealed to by several of the bystanders to do a good deed. They pointed out that the little boy in the midst of them was blind, and had been abandoned on the street in hope of someone taking pity on him and adopting him.

The eyes of the crowd were at once turned to me, and I had to make answer of some sort. Without any definite plan in my head, I said I would take the child to my house until he should be claimed, and if he was never claimed I would adopt him. I could see that this pleased everybody; so requesting a man in the crowd to carry the child, I led the way to my house, only a very short distance away.

PAO-EN.

The little fellow himself submitted to all this with perfect ease, as if used to being the sport of one person and then another. He sat contentedly munching a bun which some benevolent person had given him. I learnt afterwards that he had first been taken to the Blind School belonging to our mission, but had there been told he was too young, and that in the present state of the funds no new case could be taken in, unless the amount required (about £5 yearly) was guaranteed. I also learnt that his father had said the district from which he hailed was one which had lately been overrun with floods. Probably the poverty caused by the floods made the man wishful to part with one of his children; and the most likely one to part with, in his idea, would be the blind one.

As I have said, the little boy was too young to be admitted to the Blind School, at that time being only about four years old. Mrs. Bell, of our mission, however, was good enough to get a native woman, who acted as matron of the Girls' Boarding School, to look after him. She herself often had him with her in the house, teaching him to say the Lord's Prayer and some hymns. After a year it was considered right to admit him to the Blind School, although he was still much younger than any of the others there.

Pao-en (for that is his name) is paid for by me, but I have been greatly helped by friends in England. Since £5 a year is sufficient to keep a blind boy at that institution, it would be well if more people showed charity in this way. The boys are taught to read the Chinese Bible on what is known as the Braille system. Pao-en can already read a little in this way. Some of the boys play the harmonium quite nicely. Pao-en, being only seven years of age, is too young to be taught yet, but by-and-by I hope he will learn. The older boys learn basket-making, and I hope Pao-en will do this later on.

The Queen and the Merchant.

"Prepare to leave thy trading,
And do my work instead;
Prepare to go my errands
Across the sea," she said.

"Your Majesty, my fortune
Will certainly decline."
"If thou wilt care for my things
Then I will care for thine."

So spake, in days long vanished,
Elizabeth the Queen;
And oft when I am weary
I think upon that scene.

For One who is All-kingly
Hath made this promise mine:
"If thou wilt care for my things,
Then I will care for thine."

SUNDAY, December 8.

"THE RIGHT USE OF ABILITY" (Matt. v. 13-16).

IN this paragraph our Lord sets forth the double aspect of the Christian life. We have to be as salt and light. It is interesting that neither salt nor light has a voice. Salt does its work quietly as it arrests corruption and decay, and preserves intact the carcase into which it has been rubbed; whilst light, with gentle waves of all-pervasive influence, steals over the world so imperceptibly, that, though a beam of light leaps from the sun to our world in seven-and-a-half minutes, it strikes the petals of a full-blown rose so gently that they do not flutter to the ground. Does not our Lord, therefore, mean that character tells; that after all it is not what we say, but what we are, that constitutes our strongest influence over men, and that if day by day we fulfil the duties of life with the pungent purity of salt on the one hand, and the holy beauty of light on the other, what is corrupt, destroying, and evil, shall not be able to withstand us?

I was told the other day of a young lad who entered a city counting-house fresh from his father's home and his mother's prayers. The first morning that he was at his desk, he found himself surrounded by conversation the like of which he had never heard before. Impure and polluted sentences fell around him like the smut of a London fog. He was horrified, tears came to his eyes, and blushes to his cheeks. The chief clerk, noticing his manner, asked the reason, and the boy said, "I wish they would not speak like that. I never heard talk like that before." The chief clerk, addressing the others, said, "Gentlemen, I must ask you to refrain. Nothing shall be said in this place which will hurt the young lad who has just come among us." The result was, my informant told me, that the entire office became transformed. Who shall say that that boy was not as salt and light? You will understand that I do not for a moment undervalue the word of testimony and rebuke. These are inevitable, but not in the first instance, as it appears to me. We must begin by being and doing what Jesus Christ would be and do, if He were in our place, and then inevitably occasion will come for speech.

Remember, young friend, that salt may easily lose its savour. When it is allowed to get damp, when it is not exposed to the sun and air, it will soon lose its saltness. How many Christians there are who want to pass as salt, but when they come in contact with blasphemy, betting, gambling, and impurity, there is nothing of the strength of Christ; nothing to arrest the progress of evil, which in spite of them goes on unchecked. If you have lost your power of being a standing rebuke to evil, by the absolute purity and nobility of your character, which made it impossible for men to be their worst selves in your presence; if you find that the arrest which you put upon evil is wearing away, and men are falling back into expressions and ways which were rife before you came into their midst, ask yourself whether you are not becoming corroded and assimilated to them, and get back to the pure sunlight of fellowship with God, and communion with his Word. Breathe the ozone of the Everlasting Hills, else you will be cast aside on the dung-hill, as good-for-nothing; for a Christian who has lost Christ is the most useless man in existence. You can make something of the unregenerate, but you can do nothing with the man who professes to have passed through regeneration and repentance, and has become saltless salt.

Too many people put a bushel over their light. Some inconsistency, self-indulgence, or method of spending their leisure time is like a cover put over the lamp, or like the slide slipped on the bull's-eye lantern. No doubt they have been lighted by God, but their light is hidden. Take your inconsistency, or whatever it is which is hindering your usefulness, and ask Christ so to conquer and subdue it, that, instead of it being a hindrance to others' religion, it may be a help, since they will say, "If Christ has delivered our friend, surely He can deliver us." A subdued infirmity, a conquered inconsistency, lets your light shine so that all who are in your home see it.

Mind that your influence does not draw men to you, but to Christ. Your light is so to shine that men shall not say that you are fair, but shall look from you to Him whose glory you reflect. The mirror turns the thought of man from itself to the sun whose glory is reflected from its surface.

C.E. NOTES.

A new Union for Leigh and District has been formed of seven societies formerly connected with the Bolton Union, and some others previously unaffiliated.

The Vines Congregational Endeavourers at Rochester have found a new way of helping the Church. Once a month special services for young people are held, with a social hour after the evening service for those whose homes are not near. The Endeavourers have had neat invitation cards printed with the subject of the pastor's address, and these are distributed in the business houses in the district with the permission of the principals. The results have been most encouraging.

THE PASSOVER (Exo. xii. 1-17).

GOLDEN TEXT: 1 Cor. v. 7.

INTRODUCTORY.

THE Hebrews were now well organized, for a year they had been preparing for the great crisis. The final orders had been given by Moses to the elders, and from them passed on to the people by officers. The great day of deliverance was appointed, and the bondage was to conclude with a great religious festival. Give a word picture of the scene: It is evening, the lambs are being killed, the blood is caught, the smearing of it round the door, care lest any should go on the step, the children looking on in wonder; then all go in and shut their doors, dress for the journey, and stand round and eat the roasted lamb with their biscuits and herbs. What solemn joy, and listening all the while with beating hearts, for Jehovah is passing by! Presently, a wild cry from the palace, from the temples, from every quarter, and the great moment for starting is come! Point out what faith and obedience were required to do all this. How could anyone, after this, doubt that Jehovah was the Almighty God?

THE PASSOVER FEAST

marked the great era in the history of the Hebrews. Every detail of it was typical of the great deliverance and salvation wrought by Jesus Christ on the cross. As the Passover was the central event in the Jewish history, so was the Crucifixion the central event in the world's history. We must study it in the light of the Gospel.

TYPES.

I. THE TIME (2) (Luke xxii. 7 and 15; John xiii. 1; xviii. 28). It was the latter end of March, full moon, and from that time the Jewish year was reckoned to begin with the Passover. Jesus Christ died on the cross during this feast.

II. A LAMB (3). Jesus Christ was pointed out as "THE LAMB" (John i. 29). There are twenty references to Him as the Lamb in the Book of Revelation.

III. WITHOUT BLEMISH (5). Pointing to the Perfect Saviour (Lev. xxi. 18-22; 1 Pet. i. 19).

IV. FIRST YEAR, in its prime. So Christ was offered in his young strong manhood (Luke iii. 23).

V. CHOSEN out from the flock. Jesus Christ one of mankind (Heb. ii. 14).

VI. CHOSEN BEFOREHAND (6). Jesus was chosen to be the Saviour from the beginning of the world (Rev. xiii. 8; Luke xxiii. 35).

VII. SHUT UP FOUR DAYS to be closely examined. Jesus Christ made his last entry into Jerusalem four days before the Passover, on the very day when the Paschal lamb was set apart. He was examined and no fault found in Him (John viii. 46, xviii. 38, xix. 4, 6).

VIII. KILLED BY THE PEOPLE (Acts ii. 23; Matt. xxvii. 25).

IX. IN THE PLACE GOD APPOINTED (Deut. xvi. 2, 5, 7; Luke xiii. 33; Heb. xiii. 12, 13).

X. THE BLOOD TO BE SHED (7). The life is in the blood, the lamb must be slain. Why (Luke xxii. 20; Heb. ix. 22)?

XI. IN THE EVENING (Mark xv. 34).

XII. BLOOD SPRINKLED (13). Individual application. Each one for himself. The only means to secure safety (1 Pet. i. 2; Heb. ix. 13, 14; 1 John i. 7).

XIII. NOT ON THE GROUND (Heb. x. 29).

XIV. NOT A BONE BROKEN (John xix. 33, 36).

XV. NOT RAW OR SODDEN (9). To distinguish it from all other sacrifices (2 Chron. xxxv. 13). Only one Sacrifice for sin (Heb. x. 10).

XVI. ROAST WITH FIRE. Denoting the sufferings of the Saviour (Psa. xxii. 14, 15; Luke xxii. 41-44; Heb. v. 7-9).

XVII. UNLEAVENED BREAD AND BITTER HERBS (xv. 1; Cor. v. 7, 8; Zech. xii. 10).

XVIII. TO BE EATEN. The believer's part. All who were sheltered under the blood were to eat, first sprinkled, then appropriated. "Christ in us" our source of strength (Num. ix. 9-14). "This do in remembrance of Me," said our Lord (1 Cor. xi. 23-30).

XIX. READY (11). "Loins girded" (Luke xii. 35, 36; Eph. vi. 14); "Shoes on" (Eph. vi. 15; Isa. lii. 7); "Staff in hand" (Psa. xxiii. 4); in haste, waiting, and watching (1 Sam. xxi. 8; Psa. cxix. 60).

XX. ALL THAT REMAINED TO BE BURNED. Lest any dishonour be done to the Lamb. No dishonour befell Christ's body after his death (Luke xxiii. 53).

APPLICATION.

The only way to get our sins passed over (Acts iv. 12).

No excuse for anyone, since God has provided the Sacrifice (Heb. x. 26).

We must never forget God's wonderful deliverance.

Y.W.C.A. Notes.

ON the invitation of Mrs. Herbert Arbuthnot, a number of friends gathered on November 26 to bid Miss Johnson Godspeed on returning to her work among the young women of Alexandria. During her four weeks' visit to this country, she has received several encouraging tokens of the good hand of God upon her. Among other gifts for the work, one Y.W.C.A. has undertaken the salary of a clerk to relieve her. The World's Committee have made themselves responsible for £250 a year.

Over 200 delegates attended the National Conference at Birmingham on November 22. The meetings were enthusiastic, and the papers on such new subjects as District Councils, Members' Committees, and County Conferences were of deep interest. Temperance work among factory girls, restaurants, and some houses of business in turn occupied attention. One feature of the Conference was the earnest part which delegates took in the discussion, time failing on every occasion for all to speak who desired to do so.

The principal meeting for Birmingham itself was held on Thursday evening in the Town Hall, which was filled with 3,000 eager listeners, many being unable to obtain admission. It was observed that never had the Town Hall been so crowded, except occasionally at political gatherings. The speakers were Miss Morley (on the World's Y.W.C.A.), Hon. E. Kinnaird (on the British Y.W.C.A.), and Rev. J. H. Jowett and Miss Meyer (on the personal work of each member).

Several sessions of the Conference were entirely devoted to the work in other lands. At the opening session Mrs. Tritton (World's Y.W.C.A. President) asked interest in and prayer for the World's Conference to be held in Geneva in August, 1902, and at the closing session the Hon. E. Kinnaird pleaded for Indian women. Miss Reynolds (general secretary of the World's Y.W.C.A., just returned from her tour) asked for workers and funds for work in such distant fields and for such divers needs as the students of Tokio, the factory girls of Osaka, the English-speaking community of Shanghai, and the Chinese girls of Fouchou.

The speech that struck deepest was the story told by Miss Johnson from Alexandria, whose work is to protect not only English and European girls, but those of all nationalities who find themselves friendless and often in grave moral danger in that city. It is not easy to realize the needs of such girls at Alexandria, and it is the desire of the Y.W.C.A. to have a permanent worker and a good Home in every seaport of the Empire where girls are likely to arrive. Miss Johnson says:—To meet these needs takes time, thought, sympathy, opened eyes, and full supply of grace. The motto of the conference was that of its chief magazine —"Go Forward."

The British headquarters are in the same building as the offices of the London and South of England Divisions, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.; the North of England Division's Office is at Gordon Hall, Blackburne Place, Liverpool; the Scottish Office at 122, George Street, Edinburgh; and the Irish Office at Harcourt Street, Dublin.

Million New Pledges Crusade.

Rev. Dr. HENRY'S CAMPAIGN.

CONTINUING the remarkable services which have done so much to stimulate public interest in the temperance cause, Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and the Fisk Jubilee Singers, after concluding the campaign at Bristol, held two largely attended meetings in the Park Hall, Cardiff, on November 27.

At the afternoon gathering, Mr. John Cory, J.P., presided, and in the evening, Alderman Sanders, J.P. Dr. Henry made an earnest appeal for unity among the churches in the struggle against the drink traffic, and in every way the meetings were abundantly fruitful.

On the succeeding evening the Town Hall, Portsmouth, was the place of meeting, and the spacious building was crowded with a deeply interested audience. A correspondent writes: "I specially felt that the meeting was under the power of the Most High. Dr. Henry spoke in more telling fashion than I have ever heard him before . . . Everyone seemed delighted, and the immense audience enthusiastically passed a resolution hoping for another and longer visit from Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers. I was much impressed with the happy terms that exist between Dr. Henry and the Singers."

Following on Portsmouth, the village of Lindfield, Sussex, was visited at the invitation of the Dowager Countess of Tankerville. Although there was no hall or place of worship in which to meet, yet through the untiring and devoted energy of the Countess a meeting of 600 or 700 villagers and people from outlying cottages were gathered together into a large building in course of preparation for a laundry. Here the people contentedly stood while Dr. Henry dilated, in his own impassioned manner, on his all-important theme of total abstinence, to the delight and profit of his hearers, and with the result that true conviction was produced, and pledges secured, not the least influential name on the roll being that of Lady Tankerville.

Of the meetings at Brighton, on November 30 and December 1 and 2, Mr. Cooper and Mr. Sawyer, the diligent joint honorary secretaries pro tem., concurred in saying that the first was the best Saturday night meeting ever known to take place in the Dome, both as to numbers and interest. On Lord's Day afternoon there was a very large attendance, and in the evening an overflowing gathering of the most attentive and solemn order, well calculated to lead the total abstainers of Brighton to take fresh heart and make renewed consecration. The gathering on Monday afternoon, so large and deeply attentive, indicated a growing interest in the subject, with an evident desire on the part of the people to hear all that Dr. Henry could say. An earnest desire was expressed, too, for a more prolonged mission at some future time. Under Dr. Henry's powerful addresses an inspiring and educational process has been going on, which could not fail to make a deep and lasting impression upon the large audiences which assembled in the Dome day after day. It is confidently hoped that the outcome will be seen in a great revival of temperance sentiment and activity in Brighton. Rev. S. B. Lane presided over the closing meeting, and in telling words, clinched by undeniable statistics, exposed the fallacies and inconsistencies of the Public-House Trust as a "cure" for drunkenness, or as the remedy for a traffic which is evil, root and branch, and only evil, and for which there is no solution but its utter destruction.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Hull (The Circus, Anlaby Road), Thurs., Dec. 5, at 7.30 p.m., chairman, T. R. Ferens, Esq., J.P.; Fri., Dec. 6, at 3 p.m., chairman, Rev. J. Pickett, 7.30 p.m., chairman, T. Priestman, Esq. Newcastle on Tyne (The Town Hall), Sat., Dec. 7, at 7.30 p.m., chairman, Dr. V. H. Rutherford; Sun., Dec. 8, at 3 p.m., chairman, Rev. A. T. Guttery, at 8 p.m., chairman, Councillor George Lunn; Mon., Dec. 9, at 3 p.m., in the chair, Mrs. R. Spence Watson, 7.30 p.m., chairman, Mr. W. Goode Davies, Sunderland (Victoria Hall), Tues., Dec. 10, at 3 p.m., chairman, T. R. Blumer, Esq., 7.30 p.m., chairman, Alderman W. Bruce; Wed., Dec. 11, at 3 p.m., in the chair, Mrs. Wilson Jones, 7.30 p.m., chairman, T. W. Backhouse, Esq. Darlington (Assembly Hall, High Northgate), Thurs., Dec. 12, at 3 p.m., chairman, G. D. Wilson, Esq., C.C., 7.30 p.m., chairman, Councillor J. G. Harbottle, Esq., ex-mayor.

Salvation Army Rescue Work

THE annual meeting of the Salvation Army's social work amongst women has been held at the Queen's Hall, the Right Hon. Sir Algernon West, K.C.B., presiding. The gathering was large and sympathetic, and received Mrs. Booth's account of the work done under her direction during the past year with considerable satisfaction.

The chairman expressed his sympathy with the work, and assured Mrs. Booth of the sympathy of the London County Council, congratulating her upon the cordial relationships existing between the civic and religious workers. He asked the meeting to make an act of heroic self-sacrifice in the matter of giving to assist a cause so deserving and honest.

Mrs. Booth, after referring to the recent serious illness of her husband, and to the removal of friends of the work by death, pointed out that the social work represented the true spirit of Christianity in seeking out the very lowest and worst, referring particularly to her midnight workers in the West End and the larger provincial cities. During the past year no less than 1,867 fresh cases had passed through the Rescue Homes, and a second chance had been given to 356 of those who had passed through in previous years. Of the new cases, 1,570 are reported as satisfactory. Of the women received, 553 have been mothers; 220 children have been born in the Institutions, and £1,000 has been obtained for maintenance from the fathers of such children. A magistrate recently wrote as follows: "Please receive the enclosed 10s. with my best thanks for the good services rendered by the Salvation Army ladies in the trying work at the police-courts, especially in regard to the way they so readily help me."

Mrs. Booth, by arrangement with the Home Secretary, has undertaken to receive into her Inebriates' Homes, women who have passed through Inebriate Retreats, with a view to assisting them to meet temptations to drink, and to finding them employment; as well as to open a home for fatherless children, in addition to other extensions of the work. Mr. William Green (Bickley), Sir John Cockburn, and Dr. Heywood Smith also warmly eulogised the work. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Booth, 101, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

Among London Poor.

"There is a whole world of sights and sounds around us, to which we are blind and deaf, because we have not trained the eyes and ears of our hearts to be of quick understanding."

SUCH sights and sounds—sights of need, sounds of sorrow—are met with on every hand in the visits of Mildmay deaconesses among the London poor. Whatever their privations be in summer, they are far greater during the chills of winter, and that the eyes and ears of many a heart may be opened to see and hear, and then, with open hand, to minister kindly relief, a few short notes are given:—

A TALE OF STRUGGLE.

At the top of one of our crowded buildings in the East End lives a poor widow, nearly seventy. Her room, though the furniture is scanty, is a pattern of cleanliness and neatness. Although her smile is bright and her voice is cheery, one can easily see the pinched, half-starved look on her face, which tells its tale of struggle. She is a finisher by trade, i.e., one who makes buttonholes, and sews buttons and linings on garments. She is paid about 2s. a dozen.

Another old woman is in a tiny back room. She has 4s. 6d. per week to live upon, half-a-crown of which has to be "laid aside for the rent." Only 2s. to buy food, clothing, and everything else with, yet never an anxious look or dark cloud crosses this old saint's face, and never a murmur escapes her lips! What are more valuable lessons than those learnt from God's poor?

CHILDREN WHO LIVE IN ATTICS.

Come and see where some others live—husband, wife, and four children in two attic rooms at the top of a three-storied house, in which there are already five other families! The father works in the cattle market, and out of his slender and uncertain wage they have to pay 7s. a week rent, and feed and clothe the four children and themselves. The mother does her best to keep them clean and tidy, and off the streets. Their poor little pinched faces tell the tale of insufficient food and scanty clothing.

"GOD HELPS US ON AGAIN."

Here we have an old couple. The wife is a cripple; never goes out, sits month after month in this one room, which is living, workroom, and bedroom all combined. The husband makes zinc chimneys, a trade he learnt when thirteen years of age; he is too old now to venture up ladders and put the chimneys up, so he makes them at home when the orders come. In this way he can keep his wife company, and labour for her support. They never beg or complain, only "When times are at their worst," he said, we begin to lose heart a bit, but God helps us on again."

Cases like these might be multiplied, but the above will suffice as samples of the need which, for Christ's sake, we desire to relieve.

(Mrs.) E. Codner.

Scriptures for India.

THE Unions whose addresses we gave in our last issue are, without exception, receiving a hearty response to the proposals that Christians in this country should present the Scriptures to persons in India who are able to read, but who are yet without copies of the sacred volume. The following letter from Mr. M. Kenchington (of the London Banks Prayer Union, 6, Hamilton Road, Highbury, N.), is representative of the spirit of gratitude to which many have testified:—

I am very thankful that the London Banks Prayer Union was led to join in the "Scriptures for India" movement. It is specially favoured with a great opportunity for disseminating the Scriptures, there being a large number of native bank clerks in all the chief cities of India, all of whom can read English. Therefore the elegantly-bound and well-printed Bibles and Testaments which you are supplying with the labels inside, showing that they come as personal presents from Englishmen of their own profession (most of the donors having inserted their business addresses), and bearing the statement that it is in commemoration of Victoria, Queen and Empress—almost assures their acceptance. Further, as these books are in English, they will be received as a compliment to the scholarship of the receivers; and being accompanied by much prayer, great results may be expected.

This Prayer Union is now sending out 157 Bibles and 464 New Testaments in English, and has forwarded the money and labels for 100 Testaments and 150 copies of the Gospels in the vernacular. But this number does not meet the needs of Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, and Rangoon, and leaves untouched such cities as Allahabad, Agra, Delhi, Lucknow, Karachi, &c.

So far almost all the funds have come from members of the Union (who in addition support their own missionary in India), but probably many Christian banking men in the provinces reading this, will hasten to enable us to send the Word of Light and Life to all the banking centres of India. Labels representing the amount subscribed will be sent at once to every donor.

What is true of the Banks Union is true of the others as well. We believe the opportunity only requires to be made known to be eagerly taken up by very many all over the country. But the time is short, the hope of the promoters being that the distribution should begin on January 1. It is, therefore, highly desirable that all who wish to take part in this testimony for Christ to the people of India should make their intention known to the respective Unions within a week from this date.

Evangelistic.

Edinburgh Castle, E.

A MONTH'S services have been concluded at the Edinburgh Castle, E., by Mr. C. Lazenby, of the Evangelization Society. The visit, by the blessing of God, proved a time of refreshment. Many have been the expressions of gratitude on the part of God's people for the helpful expositions of the Word. The addresses to the unsaved, which were not without fruit, have been characterized by a clear, Scriptural explanation of the way of salvation.

Walter Notman, Superintendent.

The Weaver Brothers at King's Lynn.

The twelve days' mission conducted by the Brothers Weaver in the Primitive Methodist Church, King's Lynn, was a time of deep blessing. The addresses of Mr. Bewley Weaver were delivered with emotion and power, and the singing of Mr. Frank was impressive. Every evening during the mission, and also on the morning of the second Sunday, souls were pointed to the Saviour. There were many inquirers, including a number of the Sunday school scholars. The mission was a time of spiritual refreshing. Geo. Bell.

Rev. John Wilson at Sheffield.

A fruitful mission was conducted at Zion Congregational Church, Attercliffe, Sheffield, November 18-26, by Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich. The addresses were of an earnest character, and much blessing to Christians has been the result of the work done. A number of persons passed through the inquiry room. In addition to the regular services, Mr. Wilson, who was indefatigable in seeking to win men to Christ, addressed the workmen at Messrs. Hadfield's, and also at the Smelting Works of Messrs. Wilson, as well as a meeting at the Midland Railway sheds. Mr. Wilson's visit will long be remembered. W. A. G.

Mr. C. E. Barraclough at Beeston.

During the fortnight's mission recently conducted at Beeston by Mr. C. E. Barraclough, the Gospel Mission Hall was crowded nightly, and the people listened intently to the preaching of the Truth. Many were dealt with in the inquiry rooms. An effort put forth to reach the frequenters of public-houses aroused much attention. Christian workers visited the places, and invited those who were within to attend the services. A torchlight procession was arranged for eleven p.m., and this proved so successful that the hall was filled. At the conclusion of the meeting some remained to pray. On the Sunday evening the streets were processioned, and the indoor meeting was an impressive one. The services are being continued by local friends.

J. Paling, Secretary.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Nottingham.

A sixteen-days' Mission has been completed at Nottingham in connection with St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, and its offshoot at Noel Street. The first week was taken at Noel Street Church; and on the opening night (Sunday) some twenty-five professed conversion. The ensuing evenings were tempestuous or foggy, and the work was affected considerably thereby; still, good fruits appeared. Mrs. Baeyertz transferred her work the second week to Belgrave Square, and had good attendances to the last, although the weather was most unpropitious. Signs followed, however, and good was done. The afternoon Bible readings were useful and well appreciated. Mrs. Baeyertz had not previously visited Nottingham, and has made many friends on this occasion.

Mr. A. E. Sims at Knighton.

A most encouraging mission has just been concluded in the Primitive Methodist Church at Knighton, Wales, by Mr. A. E. Sims, of the Evangelization Society. The workers were gladdened by seeing sinners seeking Christ, but especially by the number of backsliders restored, and young lives consecrated to Christ. Not a few believers experienced for the first time the joy of helping seeking souls. A noticeable feature of the mission was the week-day prayer-meeting; it was a common thing for men to drop business (even on market days) and spend half-an-hour pleading with God. For the encouragement of those who find it difficult to reach "outsiders," it may be mentioned that on the penultimate day of the mission Mr. Sims challenged the congregation, in the middle of the service, to prove their love to Christ by "turning out" in a body and seeking to "bring in" the unsaved. Nearly the whole congregation responded in perfect order, to the accompaniment of the hymn, "All hail the power of Jesu's name." The novel but helpful plan answered admirably, for the congregation that re-entered the church had about doubled in size, and in the after-meeting sinners so gathered in were weeping at the Cross.

Mr. Charles Inglis at Woolwich.

A most helpful nine-days' mission, conducted by Mr. Chas. Inglis at the Woolwich Tabernacle, closed on Monday last, December 2. The report to me of the first day's services was, "A good commencement has been made," and we now joyfully add, "A better conclusion." It was feared that the attendance at the Bible reading would be small since the Woolwich people cannot well get out in the afternoon, but so many came, and the interest taken was so great, that Mr. Inglis consented to give another on the last day of the mission. The addresses to Christians on the Sunday mornings were also very highly appreciated. Mr Inglis' desire is not only to make every hearer understand the message, but also to remember it, and his success in this respect is certainly great. Few who heard it will forget the sermon of Sunday morning last, which summarized so well all that is said in the Scriptures of Enoch. The speaker noted:—(1) Enoch's path. "He walked with God." (2) His purpose. "He pleased God." (3) His prophecy. "The Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints." Every meeting, particularly those on last Lord's Day, bore much fruit. Among others, were two poor girls from the streets, several soldiers, a number of children from the Sunday school, husbands and wives, and, what perhaps delighted us most of all, was the large proportion of men who have boldly come out for Christ. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." John Wilson, Pastor.

Ardrossan Presbytery U.F. Church Mission.

Conforming to the Assembly's recommendation, special evangelistic services are at present being carried on within the bounds of the Ardrossan Presbytery, in the county of Ayr. It is pleasing to record that all the ministers had with great unanimity and heartiness thrown themselves into the movement. Great would be the pity should it anywhere be otherwise, because the need of spiritual quickening is everywhere painfully manifest, and in Ayrshire, as elsewhere, the churchless and godless form a great and constantly-increasing throng. In the towns of Kilbirnie and Kilwinning, situated about seven miles apart, in a district in which iron and mining interests largely abound, missions in the different U.F. churches have already been held. In Stevenston and Saltcoats the work is presently in progress; while Largs, West Kilbride, Ardrossan, and other places within the Presbytery's boundary, have each yet to be visited in the order mapped out. The Presbytery's operations, it is expected, will extend over a period of something like two months.

The missions in Kilbirnie and Kilwinning were conducted by a number of ministers, each giving a night in turn. This form of conducting missions does not, as a rule, however able the preachers, prove so advantageous or helpful as where only one fit and suitable speaker holds forth nightly in the same place. The results gained in the reaching of outsiders, and in the stirring up of church members to greater activity, do not seem so far as is yet known, to be large; but, when at the expiry of the campaign the reports for the Presbytery have been collated and gathered in, it is expected that there will be much on record to cheer those who have heartily thrown themselves into the work. Apart from the question of conversions, much good is most certainly being done. Rev. A. M. Moodie, of Ardeer, to whom has been entrusted the duties of convenership and organization, assured us in the course of a pleasant interview that "a kindlier feeling has been generated among the members of the different churches towards one another," and this in due season cannot fail to be productive of further good.

Ardeer and Stevenston are but two parts of one town, Ardeer being the newer and Stevenston the older. Ardeer is largely the creation of Nobel's dynamite works, which are built about a mile away among the sand cones which line that part of the Ayrshire seaboard. The week's mission in Ardeer Church was, for four nights out of the six, conducted by Rev. James Muir (Glasgow). His addresses were excellently adapted for such a mission, making a deep impression and leaving a sweet savour behind them. A few cases were individually dealt with and hopeful profession made. The second week's mission has been held in the U.F. Church in Stevenston, and Mr. Harry Young, of the Evangelization Society, has been the preacher for the week. Good has been done. The minister of the church, Rev. Matthew Millar, who was only inducted a few months ago, is a true Gospel preacher, and blessing attends his ministry. One young man to whom the evangelist spoke told him that he was converted eight weeks ago while Mr. Millar was preaching in the open air. It is not everyone who cares to preach in the open air, but the way to reach the masses is to go to them.

J. C.

Mr. R. S. Bradbrook writes from Riddings, Derbyshire:—"God is greatly owning the message here Many have confessed Christ during the past three weeks."

Under the auspices of the Baptist Church, Coatbridge, N.B., Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh commenced a fifteen days' mission in the Temperance Hall, on Sunday, November 24. Much blessing attended his ministry, especially among the ironworkers and railway men.

Mr. W. Forbes has just concluded a week's Gospel Temperance Mission at Pembroke. The attendances were good throughout, and the services were very helpful. E. T.

Mr. George Attwood, of the Evangelization Society, has just concluded a fortnight's mission at the Baptist Church, Bury St. Edmunds. Several persons who were brought in at the last special mission are now joining the church.

"Jack Cooke," the boy preacher, who recently concluded an encouraging mission at Bloomsbury Chapel (Rev. B. J. Gibbon's), is now conducting a week's meetings at Shoreditch Tabernacle (Rev. W. Cuff's).

Miss Hughes, of Hoxton Mission, has conducted a series of services at several centres in the Alford (Primitive Methodist) circuit with much acceptance. General interest was aroused, and the Gospel story, in address and song, had earnest listeners.

Mr. Leonard Weaver has conducted a four days' mission in Hastings, in connection with the Railway Mission, and P.S.A. of Robertson Street Church. The meetings were well attended, and at the closing service many bore testimony to having received blessing. Mr. Weaver has also addressed several "rallies" of friends and converts of the London Tent work in several parts of the metropolis. The gathering at Upton Parkon Wednesday week was very encouraging, as also was that on Saturday evening last at Clapham.

Mr. Bob Johnson has completed a fortnight's mission at the Mission Sanctuary, Argyle Road, Leeds. A number of people who did not usually attend any place of worship were attracted, and helpfully influenced. The gatherings were full of interest, and among those who were pointed to the the Saviour were some of notorious life. Mr. Johnson, in addition to giving evangelistic addresses, sang a number of bright Gospel songs of his own composition. Many of his hearers signed the temperance pledge. George Jesson.

A three weeks' evangelistic mission has been conducted in the Presbyterian Church, Lewes, by Mr. William Thomson, jun., of Prestwick, and Mr. Anthony C. H. Cooper. Much blessing has been received, the afternoon Bible readings proving very acceptable and helpful. "The Gospel by limelight" meetings for adults were also productive of good; while the limelight services for school boys and girls were so largely attended that the capacity of the building was strained, the area and gallery being full to overflowing. Many persons, most of them children, came forward as inquirers, and were searchingly and faithfully dealt with. Such a time of blessing has not been known in Lewes for a very long time, and Christian hearts are filled with gratitude and praise.

The Churches.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Rev. A. Hindle, M.A., curate of St. James-the-Less, Bethnal Green, E., has been appointed to succeed Rev. A. Hart as curate of St. Peter's, Highgate Hill, N.

The new Chaplain-General (the Bishop of Sierra Leone) will be obliged to return to Africa for a short time to wind up his episcopal work before he enters upon his duties permanently.

The Bishop of Dover recently consecrated the new church which has been erected to meet the needs of the district known as Northumberland Heath, an outgrowth of Erith, Kent, gathered around the Parish Church of Erith there is an excellent work on Evangelical lines under the direction of the vicar (Rev. G. A. S. Adams), and "The Heath"—as the new district is called—has hitherto been served by a small school-church.

Congregational.

Rev. S. A. Tipple has completed forty-five years of ministry at Central Hill Church, Upper Norwood. In spite of his long term of service Mr. Tipple remains in good health.

Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road (Rev. George Suttle), has reduced the debt on the new buildings by £650 during the last year, leaving £7,900 still to be raised.

Rev. D. B. Hooke recently addressed the students at Harley College on the claims of the British Colonies, and stated that fourteen students from the College are now labouring in connection with Colonial Congregational Churches. One of these, Rev. J. Ramage, has just been elected Moderator of the Congregational Union of South Africa; and the latest to go out, Rev. Alban E. Heath, has commenced a good work at Paarl. A student who recently left has been, conditionally, called to Pretoria.

The following resolution—a copy of which is to be sent to each of the county unions throughout the country—has been adopted by the General Committee of the Congregational Union:—"That the attention of this committee having been called to a 'grand prize drawing' in connection with a Congregational church, it desires hereby emphatically to declare its strong disapproval of this method of raising money as being opposed to the spirit of the New Testament teaching, injurious to public morals, a violation of the traditions of our Congregational churches, and an incentive to that passion for gambling which is a growing curse to the country."

Baptist.

All the Bristol College students who were ready to accept pastorates at the close of last session have settled, and have begun work in the midst of dense populations, Mr. G. E. Moore, who was accepted last year by the Baptist Missionary Society for the Congo Mission, and has taken a year's medical instruction at Livingstone College, is proceeding immediately to his sphere of labour.

Rev. F. A. Rees, of Stretford, Manchester, has been urging the Baptist churches at Lancashire and Cheshire to establish an Order of Elders as distinct from deacons. For the latter he would keep the more "secular" concerns of the church, regarding the elders as spiritual helpers to their ministerial brethren. On the ministers, he thinks, far too heavy a responsibility now rests, and it is not possible for them to care for their churches as they ought, so that "discipline and order" has become in some cases almost dead letters.

Rev. W. J. Avery, of Norwood, sends an interesting account of progress made at Westbourne Chapel, W. Particularly Mr. Avery shows that much spirited stimulus has come from the Saturday evening prayer-meeting, which is conducted by the pastor, Rev. George Freeman, and is well attended. "Pastor and people," says Mr. Avery, "alike believe that it is in fellowship with God that they keep alive and powerful the flame of zeal for his work. The deacons attend the prayer-meeting in force, and the entire church is well represented." The church is flourishing in many ways. A number of hearers have recently sought the Saviour.

In celebration of the completion of twenty-six years' work in Norwood by Rev. Walter Hobbs, an effort has been made at the Tabernacle, Gipsy Road, in aid of the building of much-needed Sunday-school and Bible-class premises at the rear of the present structure. At a public meeting, held in the chapel, Mr. G. Shrubsall, L.C.C., in the chair, Mr. Hobbs made a brief statement, in which he said they have a church of 190 members, and over 300 children in the Sunday-school, while Bible-classes have to meet in the lobbies because of the want of better accommodation.

The Baptist Union Annuity Fund exists to succour aged and infirm ministers and ministers' widows. Last year the annuity paid to ministers was £42 4s., and to widows £28 2s. 8d.: and to secure these payments £1,640 19s. 3d. were received in free contributions. The amounts are below those aimed at (£45 and £30 respectively). Up to date this year the committee have only received £760, which sum, together with the further estimated amount receivable (£300), will only enable them to pay for the year 1902, £38 4s. 8d. to ministers, and £25 9s. 9d. to widows. An urgent appeal is therefore made for immediate help from churches and individual Christians. The secretary is Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, Baptist Union Offices, Furnival Street, Holborn, E.C.

Methodist.

The Methodist Free Church, Paradise Road, Stockwell, S.E., situated in a working-class neighbourhood, was in need of extended premises to carry on its increasing work. Unwilling to incur fresh liabilities, the members are adding a new wing to the present building. For some weeks a band of workmen, after finishing their regular day's labour, have devoted their time to this undertaking in the most praiseworthy fashion. It is hoped that the buildings, which in the ordinary way would have cost some £300, will be opened free from debt, and to this end, in addition to the labour being entirely voluntary, gifts of money, timber, &c., have already been received.

The Wesleyan Quayside Service Association, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, has concluded its season of open-air meetings. The Association, which is represented by members of the several Methodist churches in the Newcastle and Gateshead district, has for its object the bringing of the Gospel, both by speech and song, into the very midst of one of the most crowded places to be found anywhere in England on a Sunday morning. All sorts and conditions of men congregate here every Sunday morning, and in addition may be seen "ice cream vendors," "stall holders," "cheap Jacks," and "tipsters," in abundance. Several men have been converted and joined the Methodist Church, and many others have signed the total abstinence pledge.

Presbyterian.

The nomination board has unanimously selected Rev. A. H. Drysdale, of Morpeth, as Moderator of the Synod for 1902. Mr. Drysdale has accepted the nomination.

The Synodical Committee for the Instruction of Youth, at its recent meeting at Regent Square Church, discussed the National Young People's Mission in Sunday schools which is fixed for next spring. It was shown that the Sunday schools in the Presbyterian Church of England have increased from 450 to 480 in the last seven years, but that the number of scholars has decreased by 1,500 in the same period.

The Salvation Army.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth has received a despatch from the commissioner in charge of the Salvation Army's work in South Africa describing his urgent need of women's and children's clothing for distribution amongst both the English and Boer sufferers from the war. Parcels for this purpose will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Mrs. Booth at 101, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.

The twenty-first anniversary of the Chiswick Mission, of which Mr. R. T. Smith is the leader, was celebrated recently, and the services were largely attended. Mr. Chas. Cook spoke on the Sunday morning, and Mr. Smith in the evening, and at a public meeting held on the following day addresses were given by Rev. J. H. Rushbrooke and other friends.

In connection with the Weaver Tent Bible Class and Mission Band a public meeting was recently held in Queen's Place Mission Hall, Wandsworth Road, S.W. Dr. Cronin and Messrs. Chamberlain and Headlam were among the speakers. The leader of the band will be glad to welcome fresh workers at 102, Stewart's Road, Wandsworth Road, any Wednesday evening at 8 p.m.

At the anniversary of the work at the Kent Martyrs' Memorial Hall, Dartford, stirring addresses were given by Mr. Vicary. The annual report states that the Young Men's Bible Class, which began some fifteen years since with nine members, now numbers 246. During its existence 1,241 young men have passed through its ranks. The Protestant Institute has also proved helpful, and the Lads' Bible Class and the Juveniles Protestant Mission are making good progress.

During the past ten years Mr. J. J. Browne, of the London City Mission, has done excellent work in the public houses and beer shops of the metropolis, delivering the Gospel message to the frequenters of the bars, and also to the publicans and their assistants. Through personal dealing, and by the distribution of helpful literature, Mr. Browne has been able to influence many for good. The tenth anniversary of the work was celebrated on November 27, at Colmer's Institute, N.W., by a tea and public meeting, to which about a hundred potmen and their wives accepted invitations. Mr. H. Marnham presided, and Gospel addresses were delivered by Mr. W. Prentice, of the Mission to "Coalies," and by Mr. Browne. The occasion was one of much interest and encouragement.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. WILLIAM MCKILLIAM, minister of the United Free Church, Possilpark, Glasgow.—Rev. JOSEPH RHODES, for many years Precentor of the Wesleyan Conference, from which position he only retired last year. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1863.—Mr. J. MUIR LEITCH, an esteemed elder of Regent Square Presbyterian Church.—Mr. ROBERT HOLMES WHITE, a mainstay of the Church of England Young Men's Society, and a prominent supporter of the Church Sunday School Institute, the Religious Tract Society, and other organizations and institutions.—Rev. JOHN WILLIAM BURKE, who, in spite of blindness, was an ardent evangelical worker. He was a warm supporter of the C.M.S. and the Bible Society.—SAMUEL ALFRED ALEXANDER, late of the Medical Staff, Imperial Yeomanry Hospital, Deelfontein, S. Africa, and son of Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander, evangelists, of 42, Argyle Road, Ilford, Essex, passed away triumphantly from earth to Heaven (after many months of suffering), on Sunday, December 1, at 6.50 a.m.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS. — Mr. W. Bilton, evangelist, Hevingham, near Norwich; Mr. William Grundy, 18, Brick Street, Broadbottom, near Manchester, Mr. W. Burgess, 33, Hawles Street, Margate (village work); Mrs. D. A. Spurnay, Station Road, Salterton, S. Devon; Mr. G. Waight, Station Road, Earley, Reading; Mr. W. Howe, 93, Great Queen Street, New Town, Dartford; Mr. W. Martin, Lynda House, Tennison Avenue, Lynn; Mr. John Moseley Wills, 22, Cottenham Road, Upper Holloway; Miss A. Adams, 210, Glyn Road, Lower Clapton, N.E.

Personalia.

Mr. JOHN JACKSON, organizing secretary to the Mission to Lepers, has been compelled, under medical advice, to cancel all his engagements until the New Year. He is suffering from the strain of overwork; but it is confidently hoped that a period of rest will lead to complete restoration.

Mrs. ARTHUR W. MARLING, whose work among the Fan tribes in the French Congo Territory of Western Africa, is at present in training in a maternity home in order to future usefulness. She hopes to be free towards the end of January to address meetings in aid of her work in the Fan country. She is still seeing through the press her translation of Foster's "Story of the Bible," the production of which has engaged the warm sympathy of Christians in England and America. About £100 is still needed to cover the cost of the work.

Children's Books. Protestant Books. Biblical Books. "Two-Version" Bible.

WITH the coming of Christmas, the question of presents arises. Some excellent gift-books for children will be found in the special parcel which Messrs. Morgan & Scott offer for 10s., carriage paid. It contains eight volumes of Rev. E. Payson Hammond's works; a book by A.L.O.E., entitled PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY; a tale by Mrs. Hunter, entitled JOE WITLESS; and the six volumes of "NETTIE'S MISSION" LIBRARY; in all 16 volumes for 10s., as stated above (or 11s. 9d. if for abroad).

Another special offer, which is of great value at this time, when so many are being turned aside to the errors of Romanism, is the parcel of Protestant books for 9s., carriage paid, including a splendid edition of FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS, with twelve full-page illustrations, and a steel-plate frontispiece. This book alone is published at 10s. 6d. Then there is a copy of THE CATACOMBS AT ROME, by Mr. Benjamin Scott, F.R.A.S.; three of Miss Richardson's books, giving practical experience of Romanism; and forty-two copies of a pamphlet on THE CONFESSIONAL, by Miss Richardson. This latter will be found very useful for distribution. The whole parcel is offered for 9s. (or 11s. 3d. if for abroad).

If a present is wanted for a minister, evangelist, S.S. teacher, or other Christian worker, the six-shilling parcel of Biblical works would be found most useful. It includes a copy of CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE (3s. 6d.); a handbook to the Old and New Testament, entitled THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER (2s. 6d.); THE BIBLE INTERPRETER, an illustrated dictionary of the Scriptures (1s. 6d.); and two other valuable works: SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES (2s. 6d.), by Dr. J. Anderson, and CHRIST LIFTED UP (2s. 6d.), by Rev. R. Gilchrist. These five books, it will be noted, total up to 12s. 6d.; but the publishers offer the parcel, carriage free, for 6s. (or if for abroad, 8s.).

The publishers, however, make it a condition with all these "special offers" that those ordering the same will undertake to carefully place the copies of THE CHRISTIAN (which will be enclosed in each parcel) with some friends not as yet acquainted with the paper, in the hope that they may be induced to become regular subscribers.

The "Two-Version" Edition of the Bible, containing the Authorised Version, with the differences of the Revised Version printed in the margin, so that both texts can be read from the same page, has met with a wide acceptance. A beautifully-bound copy of this Edition of the Holy Scriptures (price £1) is offered to anyone who secures twelve new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN. In a number of cases Christian workers, at once concerned for the extended influence of THE CHRISTIAN, and desirous of possessing a valuable book, set to work with very encouraging results. There is also a Wide Margin Edition, published at 27s.; and, whereas for twelve new subscribers a 20s. copy of the ordinary edition is given, for sixteen new subscribers a copy of the 27s. "Wide Margin" edition, printed on writing paper, an ideal "worker's" Bible, will be presented. Full particulars of this scheme can be obtained on application to Morgan & Scott, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., to whom all orders for the above-mentioned books should be sent.

[ADVT.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C. Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

God's Call to Repentance. A numerously and influentially-signed circular has been issued, pointing out the many voices which at present call on us, as a people, to "humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt us in due time." We have again and again urged the need for national and individual repentance, and readily join with those who have proposed a time of public confession and supplication :—

> The "holy days," which were to commemorate the wondrous lowliness and love of our Lord in his incarnation and death, and the unspeakable gift of the Holy Ghost are, by numbers, turned into occasions of drunkenness. "The Lord's Day," which was to be "holy unto the Lord," for the worship of God, is by multitudes looked upon as a day for self-gratification. Profligacy and gambling are the ruin of numbers. Large fortunes are amassed by some who do not seem to realize that they have taken the labourer's wages, which should have maintained his home in comfort, and induced him to buy a drink which too often inflames his brain, overthrows his reason, wrecks his moral nature, and makes him a curse to the wife and children, to whom he should have been a blessing; and this, wonderful to say, with the tacit acquiescence of too many of us who bear the holy name of Christ.

Day of National Prayer. The fact that the long-continued struggle in South Africa is one between two Christian peoples, in the sight of a heathen world, also calls for much heart-searching. The devastating famine in India is not yet over. We feel sure that many of our readers will learn with satisfaction that the signatories to the circular have agreed, as far as possible, to observe December 31, with all fellow Christians who will join them, as a day of humiliation before the Lord and of intercession for our nation and empire, praying that—

> As members of Christ's Church, their own testimony to his truth may be increasingly in the power of the Holy Ghost.
> That the Government of the country may be ordered of the Lord.
> That the nation at large may be subject to our God and his law.

At 8 p.m., the beginning of the New Year in India, there will be united prayer in Britain and India, that power from on high may come on all the churches.

Colonists and Natives. We have several times recently called attention to the Native Question in South Africa, and urged our readers to follow the development of events with a watchful eye. Christian people in this country largely gave their acquiescence to the present war owing to their abhorrence of the way in which the Boers had treated the Native Races, with the intention of settling that question once for all on lines in harmony with British policy everywhere. Colonial feeling on this matter has never been healthy, and there are ominous signs in Rhodesia just now that it is growing steadily worse. In proof of this, no stronger evidence could be asked for than two articles published on October 8 and 24 in the Rhodesia Herald. In the former, the editor says, "However the Boers treated the blacks, Britain is not fighting them on that point. Far from it. We should all hail with delight a recognition of the true relationship between natives and colonists, such as the Rand laws were based upon." The basis of these laws was practically a slavery pure and simple. That is what the Rhodesian leaders seem desirous of re-establishing in British territory.

A Cold-Blooded Policy. Not satisfied with throwing out such sinister hints, and suggesting that they had "every reason for believing" that Lord Milner will, "in the natural course of events, begin to see native affairs eye-to-eye with the colonist," the same paper, in the second article, still further throws off disguise, and pleads openly for a treatment of the native which is opposed to every tradition of British Government and every principle of justice. It complains that "Native Commissioners are not allowed to 'procure' labour" — a veiled way of demurring at the inability to use force. It openly asserts the inferiority of the "blacks" to the "whites," and in no ambiguous language "regrets that men should be hanged anywhere for shooting natives, whether in cold blood or not." The next sentence is appalling—"There will rarely be shooting without extenuating circumstances, and, striking an average, we are bold enough to maintain that the Mosaic exchange of a life for a life is a one-sided affair, where white pays for black." These words are written in a representative South African paper. If they really express the average Colonial attitude, there will be a task of no common magnitude for the Imperial authorities to hold an even balance between native and colonist in the near future. On the Christian community the issue will finally depend. It will soon be time for an unmistakable expression of its opinion.

Christian Teaching in Indian Schools. The "reply" of the chairman of the East India Association to the proposals of Dr. Welldon, that Bible teaching should be introduced into the Government schools of India, is really no reply at all; but it is very useful as indicating the kind of spirit against which missionaries have to contend. Sir Lepel Griffin, speaking in the name of "many" Anglo-Indians, is prepared to oppose strenuously any attempt to Christianize the natives of India through Government schools. His singular reasons are that

> The idea of introducing religious teaching—dogmatic or non-dogmatic—into education is a retrograde one. The tendency of modern thought is to separate as far as possible religious from secular education. . . The teaching of modern science has swept away in the minds of most thinking people all those old myths which congregated around the old Jewish theology. . . . It has purified the Hindoo creed and made it Atheistic.

And it is this that Anglo-Indians regard with approbation! They would rather have the Hindoos atheists than either Hindoos or Christians. It is well to know exactly the reason for their opposition to Christian teaching.

The Shame of the Position. Men who speak in this manner seem wofully deficient in the most elementary notions of stewardship, as they are evidently forgetful of the teachings of history. The greatest menace to India is the presence of Anglo-Indians that are either hostile or indifferent to Christianity. The awakening of India by means of education, imposes upon us new and grave responsibilities. The more intelligent of the youths have cast off the superstitions of their fathers; the hour has come for them to receive the true Light. And if the Bible can be read in Government schools here, by what reason must it be excluded from Government schools in India? Dr. Welldon's proposition ought to be carried into practice. A fine disgrace it will be if the Government of India consents, through its schools, to destroy the religious belief of the Hindoos, while it refuses to give them a chance to learn the truth about Christ.

Jersey's Religious Danger. The Parliament of Jersey has taken a bold step in passing, by an overwhelming majority, a Monastic Orders Bill, the sole object of which is to prevent the exiled "religieux" of France from capturing the island. The great majority of the Jersey people are Protestants, and they have taken this step in self-defence. Jersey offers to French people a natural refuge, since Norman-French is the official language of the island. But Jersey belongs to Britain, and Jersey folk are extremely loyal to their King. If Jesuits were allowed to monopolize education in Jersey, it would simply mean that English as well as Protestant influence will be seriously imperilled. We know the ways of the Jesuits too well to be in any doubt of this.

A Frank Admission. It is but seldom that the (Roman) Catholic Times speaks unreservedly in regard to questions affecting Romanism. It is, therefore, surprising to find the following in the current issue :—

> Whatever be the cause, the fact is no longer deniable, that the exiled French religious, monks and nuns, have not been welcomed into most of the countries to which they turned their steps. Jersey demands to exclude them by law; Spain has decided to insist on authorization, as France did; Portugal, the other day, stoned a group of religious who wished to land at Lisbon, and forced them to re-embark; Austria, Germany, Italy prefer not to receive them; England alone lets them come; for to Ireland they do not seem to have turned their faces; and a journey to America is costly and lengthy. What does it all mean? Of course the action of a mob is not to be ascribed to a whole people; but we cannot fail to recognise that in some cases the Governments have opposed the entry of these expatriated religious. It would almost seem that a word of order had been passed, and that some hidden power was active in persecuting the exiled monks and nuns.

The writer also states that "as if the law was not to be rigidly enforced, the members of the associations are quietly returning to their own country, and under other titles are carrying on their work." The Jesuit apparently cannot be anything but jesuitical."

Firmness with Romanizers. Dr. Chavasse, the Bishop of Liverpool, a man of much charity and forbearance, has quietly and firmly taken steps to suppress Romanizers in his diocese, by refusing to license a curate to a church where the law is openly defied. The vicar admits that he himself is acting contrary to the expressed opinions of the archbishops, and yet he poses as a martyr, and speaks of "standing up for the right of the parish priest to provide for Reservation of the Blessed Sacrament." It is absurd for a man who is pledged to obey his ecclesiastical superiors to limit his obedience to those things that please him, and to complain about tyranny in other things. If this attitude be correct, then "authority" is a word without meaning. The only thing that will bring recalcitrant clergymen round, is simple firmness. It will either bring them round, or compel them to join Rome. The half-way position is untenable.

Roads from Rome. The agitation in Austria against Romanism is becoming more and more widespread, and the Vienna correspondent of The Times points out that the recent encyclical letter from the Conference of Bishops, condemning Protestant evangelistic work, has strongly intensified the feeling. "Conversion from conviction" is the accepted motto of those who are labouring to spread through Austria the simple truth as it is in Jesus, in opposition to the "wholesale" methods of Rome; and The Times correspondent asserts that at least 20,000 persons have abjured Romanism during the past three years, and that in Vienna a leading Evangelical clergyman has in that time received over 1,100 converts who were absolutely free from that political bias which the Roman bishops allege is at the root of the religious movement.

The President's Message. President Roosevelt's message to Congress was marked by two features of interest and importance. The first was its announcement of the national dangers connected with the great trusts, and the need of legislation to safeguard the public from "crimes of cunning" as they are now safeguarded from "crimes of violence." This is a new and significant note to strike. The second was the spirit of genuine friendship for this country, and the tone of congratulation adopted at the settlement of such differences as existed a little while ago on the question of the Monroe doctrine of "America for the Americans." If Congress ratifies the new treaty, which is meant to supersede the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of sixty years ago, we may look forward to a period of genuine and unbroken friendship between us and our cousins across the Atlantic, which will tend to the security of peace and progress of nations all over the world.

A Chapter in Missionary Devotion. Many who have heard of "The Cambridge Seven" have wished that Mr. B. Broomhall would issue in booklet form that division of his remarkable volume on "The Evangelization of the World" which describes their consecration of life and work. That wish is now realized in handsome form, the booklet being entitled A Story Retold. (6d. nett. Morgan & Scott.). Artistically illustrated, these pages should have many readers. They not only state facts, but present a powerful appeal for world-wide evangelization. The booklet is specially suited for distribution among college students; but all who are interested in the progress of the kingdom will find the pages deeply interesting.

A Beautiful Book. No time has been lost by Miss Nugent in gathering the Memorials of Charles Armstrong Fox (6s. Marshall Brothers). Those who knew Rev. C. A. Fox might well be impatient; but their highest anticipations are abundantly realized in the beautiful volume now issued. As a man, a pastor, and a poet—in the home, in ministerial duty, and in Convention circles, the departed one was justly held in high esteem. The memorials recall him and his teaching, his largeness of soul and beauty of character. The book has permanent value, as well as immediate interest. It is a prose poem, with much of Mr. Fox's verse inlaid, adding beauty and strength. Anon we shall have more to say.

Spasmodic Generosity. A recent pitiful case in a London Police Court, in which clear light was once more thrown upon the miserable lot of the sempstresses and others within the maelstrom of the sweating system—and which, happily, resulted in a sudden flow of charity to the unhappy woman and children concerned—may be taken as an illustration of the way in which many people act in regard to the poor. Their charity is as spasmodic as their interest. Only when a piteous story of individual suffering appears in the public prints do they awaken for a moment from their apathy, although, day by day, hundreds of men and women, not only in the East End of London, but also in provincial centres, are wasting their lives in toil for wages of little more than 1d. an hour, or are starving and dying in vile courts and slums utterly unfit for human habitation. It is not thus that real reformatory work can be done. The misery of the poor is a permanent feature of modern civilization, and its causes are beyond the reach of police-court generosity, and they who would deal with it must join hands with those who are courageously and steadily working, not only in the slums, but also labouring in other directions to bring about a drastic change in our social conditions.

Foundations in Dust. A startling statement from the United Kingdom Alliance throws a very lurid light upon the national revenue, as it shows that, unhappily, year by year the national resources are being more and more largely drawn from the drink traffic. In 1896 the the Government received from this unholy source no less a sum than £35,850,804, and this last financial year it had grown to £43,178,179. Another unpleasant feature is the development of a Tammany ring of brewers and distillers, the trades being rapidly concentrated in the hands of capitalists and large companies. Twenty years ago there were nearly 16,000 individual brewers; to-day there are only a few over 6,000; yet the production has enormously increased. On the other hand the grocer-publican is becoming more and more in evidence, the number having increased by nearly 7,000. In face of such facts as these, and of the misery and vice and crime which lie behind them, it is indeed difficult to understand the apathetic attitude of the many Christians who in regard to the temperance movement have followed the example of the Babylonians (Jer. li. 30) and "forborne to fight."

State Stumbling Blocks. Another illustration of the fostering care which the Government bestows upon the drink trade is afforded by a recent letter to the Liverpool School Board, in which the Board of Education notify their refusal to permit elementary temperance teaching as a subject of secular instruction, and prohibit such teaching in school hours. If this action is based upon any trivial technical difficulty, steps should be taken by the public for its removal, as there never was a time when it was more necessary that the young should be educated in the principles of abstinence from intoxicants. Already the delegates present at the Conference of the Denbighshire Temperance Associations have resolved to take measures to bring the subject before Parliament, and it is to be hoped that a very general movement will be made to secure the reversal of the adverse decision arrived at by the Education Board.

The Real Irish Difficulty. It is noteworthy that in two newly-published volumes professing to deal exhaustively with present-day questions affecting Ireland, and full of suggestions of remedies for wrongs and evils, nothing whatever is said to the pressing subject of the close relation between intemperance in the Sister Island and Irish poverty. Yet behind the drink traffic there looms the black cloud of misery and compulsory emigration which seems to darken and deepen day by day, despite the efforts of all those who are labouring in the true interests of Ireland. If it is startling to find that in Manchester there is a drink shop for every 168 inhabitants, what must be thought of the fact that in Clonmel there is one for every seventy-eight, every eleventh house being licensed, and that in Cork and Waterford and other cities and towns the state of things is but little better. The distiller and the brewer are the real obstacles to the material prosperity of Ireland, and if they could be set aside by the State, instead of being fostered by it, land and other questions would settle themselves.

The Impassable Barrier. The bookstalls are to be flooded with several very low-priced editions of some books which for years back have done much to unsettle men's minds in regard to the orthodox belief in the handiwork of God in creation, and the omnipresence of Divine control over the life of the universe. Renewed discussion may, therefore, be looked for as to disputed points in nature, and we shall have a repetition of the impertinent assumptions which characterize the work of the scientists who have far outrun their teacher. One thing, however, is certain, none of them can pass beyond the boundary line with which God has marked off the domain of human investigation. Milton has said that "fools rush in where angels fear to tread," but the most daring of these speculators pauses at the threshold of the mystery of life, and though he may give way to his imagination in treating of its developments, he is ignorant and silent as to its origin, simply because he will not accept the Bible statement, and cannot discover or suggest any other fact.

The Signs of an Apostle. That old question regarding the credentials of a minister of Jesus Christ, comes to the front again in the pages of a contemporary. The view taken is that we must choose between Episcopal ordination linking a man to an historic past, and a man's own personal statement that he is called to the ministry, directly, by our Lord. Such a choice is, in our view, distinctly arbitrary, and ought never to be placed before people. We are not driven to any such extremes. The best human authority upon the matter is surely St. Paul, who was not officially ordained by the Apostolic band, and who was yet chief of the Apostles. He neither made light of an historic apostolate, nor contented himself with simply affirming his own call to the Divine office. But he pointed to his work as the sine quâ non of this apostolate. He called attention to the "signs of an Apostle" wrought by Christ through him. And this is the final proof of a true call to the ministry; are the apostolic signs present or not? Nothing else avails if these are absent.

Let us Minister unto Him.

JESUS was born a Prince and a Saviour, but no royal splendour greeted his advent. His first resting-place was a cradle never made for man at all, far less to bear the form of the infant Son of God.

It was but a manger, though probably not as is generally pictured in the stable of the inn. The term "inn" did not refer merely to the one building where shelter and food were provided, but included all the outhouses and buildings connected with it, answering more exactly to our word farm.

There was, we are told, no room at any of these. The principal house was filled with travellers, who, in obedience to Cæsar's command, had come to Bethlehem to have their names enrolled for the census. All the stables would also be filled with the animals that had brought them on their journey, and thus Joseph and Mary found "no room." The only course open to them, therefore, was to accept hospitality at a neighbouring peasant's cottage, and in these—according to Dr. Thomson, the eminent Eastern authority—are often to be found mangers for the cattle, which share the same living room as their owners. In one of these, probably, the child Jesus was laid.

It was not a very remarkable thing for these poor peasants to open their humble dwelling and admit the two strangers and their little one. Probably any one of us would have done the same. It was but a commonplace act of kindness, but yet how infinitely more! In simple ignorance they welcomed their weary guests, little thinking that they were entertaining the long-looked-for Messiah.

Similarly, the two disciples on the road to Emmaus thought they were conversing with an ordinary stranger, and out of common hospitality asked Him to "abide with them, for the day was far spent." Imagine what shame would have seized them had they treated the lonely Stranger with indifference or contempt. When "Jesus Himself drew near" as they "communed with each other by the way," suppose they had quickened their pace, and said they desired not his company; how sorely their hearts would have bled if He had revealed Himself unto them then!

Surely bitter regret must have filled the hearts of the keepers of the inn when they discovered who it was for whom they had found "no room"! They would have turned away every other guest, had they only known, and would willingly have given up the profits accruing from their full house if only they had surmised what a glorious opportunity was theirs.

Like themselves, their humble neighbours had no idea that the Messiah lay in their little manger, or they would surely have given Him the best room they had. But in their ignorant kindness of heart, they anticipated the words which the Lord spoke thirty-three years later to his disciples (concerning those who will receive a reward in Heaven), when He said: "I was a Stranger and ye took Me in! Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

With such thoughts in our minds as another Christmas draws near, we very earnestly commend to our readers the various objects set forth in our Mission Supplement (pp. 21-38). It is a wonderful record of "something accomplished, something done," among the unfortunate and the lost, the aged and the poor, which may well gladden our hearts in these "Hooligan" days.

There are many who are not able to go forth themselves thus to labour, but they may cheer the hearts and strengthen the hands of those who can. Some tarry by the stuff, others go forth to the battle; but all are serving the same cause, and, as is the share of one, so shall be the share of the other in the day of account. (1 Sam. xxx. 24, R.V.)

The diverse agencies whose work is described are all deserving of that sympathetic and liberal support which alone can enable them to carry on their self-denying endeavours. May the voice of the Saviour appeal to all who have enough and to spare of this world's goods! We often sing at conventions—

> Take my silver and my gold,
> Not a mite would I withhold.

Let us now in the quiet of our homes, and in the privacy of our prayer-closets, consecrate our gifts unto the Lord; and give, each one as God hath prospered him, in the spirit of the appropriate lines by the late Edith Gilling Cherry:—

> "By love serve one another!"
> To make glad hearts more glad;
> To aid the lonely toilers,
> To cheer the sick and sad;
> To carry Heaven's sunshine
> To shadowed lives and dim—
> Such is the loving service
> We render "unto Him."
> "By love serve one another!"
> Though small the service be,
> Yet Jesus saith, beholding,
> "Ye did it unto Me!"

Gifts on behalf of these invaluable remedial Gospel agencies, with all of which we are personally well acquainted, may be sent to our publishers, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

Christian Union in Ireland.—A remarkable illustration of the helpful effects of Christian union has been given at Carrickfergus. The ministers of the various churches met together and organized a United Gospel Temperance Mission. The meetings were held in rotation in the halls of the different churches. An appeal was also made to the audience each night to sign the pledge and to decide for Christ. The attendance was overflowing, and the interest excited in the town and neighbourhood was most intense. The solemnity of the meetings was likewise exceedingly encouraging, and it is believed much good has been done; many signed the pledge, and it is thought that not a few decided for Christ. The union of the various Churches in the movement was most cordial. The town has been stirred by the services as it has not since the great Revival of 1859, and it is intended to have, during the winter and spring, a monthly meeting on similar lines in the various places of worship in rotation. It is surely good and pleasant for brethren to dwell together in unity.

On "The Chances of Life."

"OH that I had—seized what I might have had!" If, as we saw last week, discontented people are apt to ponder unduly on the fancies of life, disappointed ones think of its chances. What painful memories crowd before our vision as we think of the available chances we have failed to seize!

One morning, when a child, the writer saw a half-crown lying on the footpath. While considering whether he should pick it up or not, a man stepped forward and walked off with it. Without discussing the morality of that proceeding, or of the child's desire, we may at least remark that it was a chance missed, and certainly, at the time, a source of disappointment and regret.

Throughout life, opportunities of usefulness are afforded us, to lose or misuse which must mean eternal loss. Sometimes the failure is clearly due to our own neglect; sometimes it may be rather our misfortune than our fault. But whichever it be, the result must be lasting disappointment. Various incidents recorded in Scripture serve to enforce the need of quick perception and alert action, if we are adequately to avail ourselves of the chances of life.

(1) In Eccles. ix. 11, the Preacher says, "Time and chance (or opportunity) happeneth to all." In the case of Daniel and his three friends, for instance, they had not all the same opportunity of showing loyalty to the God of their fathers, but they availed themselves of every opportunity they had. In Dan. i., all four were tested in the matter of the king's meat; in chap. ii., Daniel only is brought before the king, to interpret the royal dream; in chap. iii., Daniel does not appear, but Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego pass bravely through the ordeal of the fiery furnace.

Thus we note that if God does not give each man the same chance as his neighbour, He does give him such a chance as he is capable of using; and history has been made out of opportunities rightly seized.

(2) At the pool of Bethesda a company of cripples lay waiting for the angel to come down and trouble the waters; and whosoever stepped in first should be healed. A man had been lying there for thirty-eight years. Listen to his sad complaint, in answer to the Lord's compassionate inquiry: "While I am coming another steppeth down before me!" Have we not, many of us, had to look back like that upon some of our opportunities? Competing for a prize, or seeking a situation, we had almost succeeded, when another competitor carried it off.

(3) Yet again. Hear the entreaty of the foolish virgins, "Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out;" and the reply of their wiser sisters, "Not so, lest there be not enough for us and you." It may seem a harsh reply at first; yet how could they answer otherwise? Do we not know men and women who, in earlier days, let slip the opportunities of getting their own oil, and who now come entreatingly to the thoughtful and industrious, saying, "Give us the fruit of your toil. You have been plodding, labouring, learning; let us share the result of it"? Perhaps we have done the same thing ourselves at school; having wasted the time of evening preparation, we have next morning, before the class began, appealed to the more industrious boy to "run over this bit of translation" for us. He may have done so, but to what ultimate profit? If we scraped through the lesson without punishment, yet in after years we had to grieve over our lost knowledge. The oil of the industrious cannot be given to the waster. Those who have lost their opportunities, must suffer that loss; it is as unreasonable as it is impossible for the idle man to reap fully the benefits of those who have been toiling hard. Oh that we had seized what we might have had!

As with temporal, so, too, with our spiritual opportunities. If we have failed in that which is least, let us see to it that, at any rate, we neglect not that which is greater. Let the lessons of the past make us wiser in the present. We live in days of boundless privilege. We are not heathen. We have known the Gospel call. "Therefore," says the writer to the Hebrews, "we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip" (marg. run out, as leaking vessels). If we have lost the chances of youth, it is not too late to seize those of maturer years. Let us not fail of these.

It is related of a well-known scientist, that on one occasion he was on a Highland moor, pursuing some botanical study. At the moment, he was minutely examining a heather bell under a microscope, when a shadow was cast before him. Looking up, he saw an aged shepherd at his side. After words of greeting, he handed to his new companion the lens and the flower. The old man gazed, and looked up, and gazed again. Then with tears in his eyes he said, "I wish ye'd never shown it me. I've trodden on thousands o' them!"

Ah, solemn lesson! If we realize not our mistakes in time, we shall for ever lament them in eternity. Seen then, in the light of God, the opportunities and privileges that on earth we had deemed of so little account will be revealed as possessing hidden beauties of which we had never dreamed. What chagrin in the futile lament, "Oh that I had seized what I might have had! Alas, for my neglected opportunities! I've trodden on thousands of them!"

Shall we not learn the lesson, and seek to live henceforth "redeeming the time (R.V. marg. buying up the opportunity); not as fools but as wise," and pray God that to us, in some degree, may be restored in Christ "the years that the locust hath eaten"? G.

"Upon His Shoulder."

"Upon his shoulder" government
Shall be henceforth, for aye,
And they by heavy burdens bent,
Themselves on Him shall stay;
Nations shall flock to Him to live,
His name shall be extolled,
His lips the law of life shall give,
His hands the reins shall hold.

"Upon his shoulder"—glorious thought!
How blest the government!
With what uplifting it is fraught!
With what divine content!
No more shall many-headed wrong
Afflict our souls with night;
All things shall yield a wealth of song,
And God shall be our Light.

"Upon his shoulder"—there I lay
The burden of my care;
He will not turn my trust away,
Or spurn my lowly prayer.
He who the universe upbears,
Will condescend to take
Direction of my life's affairs,
For His own mercy's sake.

"Upon his shoulder"—there I leave
All that I am and have;
The Lord doth now my trust receive,
And perfectly doth save.
The Crucified is all in all
(O everlasting gain!)
Shadow on his throne shall fall,
In truth must be his reign.

Christ's Workmanship.

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

THE first time I saw Cologne Cathedral—nearly half a century ago—it presented a stumpy appearance, for the towers had not yet been built. The next time I saw it, the scaffoldings on which the builders were busy were rather a disfigurement. But a few years since, when I beheld the completed towers, lifting their snow-white splendours into the sunlight, I felt that the old historic Rhine saw no such magnificent object in all its course from the Alpine mountains to the sea.

This is a bit of a parable of the way in which the Master constructs a Christian. The Bible describes true Christians as Christ's workmanship, created anew unto good works. If any sharp critic should look over a company of church members gathered at a communion-table, he might say, "Well, if these are Christ's workmanship, they are very imperfect specimens, as I can testify from personal acquaintance with some of them." Very true, but if that same critic wished to select a piano he would not go into a manufactory where its different parts were being put together; he would go into the sale-room and see the finished instruments. This world is only a workshop for the fashioning of Christian character. "Ye are Christ's building," said the great Apostle; the towers were not up yet. "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect," was that same apostle's honest confession; the scaffoldings were still standing, and the Master's work on that heart and life was still incomplete.

"Before I was converted," said a minister to me, "I wonder how any one could live in the same house with me." Brother A— was plagued with unruly passions; Sister B— with envy and censoriousness; Deacon C— had to contend with natural indolence, and Elder D— with a constitutional covetousness made worse by a stingy parentage. Every one of these had to encounter the evil atmosphere of a "world lying in the Wicked One." Yet out of such materials Christ Jesus has had to rear what shall become in due time a temple of the Lord! Verily, my dear friends, you and I had better confess that the best part of us is what our patient Master has already made, and the worst part of us is what remaining selfishness and unbelief would not let Him make.

Christian character-building is like cathedral building—a gradual process. Faith joins the new convert to Jesus, and then to that foundation must be added the courage, the meekness, the patience, and the godliness which are the evidences of growth in grace. Let no new beginner be discouraged. Oaks do not grow like asparagus. A strong and solid godly character is not finished in a year. Some poor pumice-stone has to be thrown out, and bad timber to be rejected. Every year in a true Christian's life—be it long or short—ought to witness positive advance in "good works." "Am I growing?" is the question for every one of us to ask. How do I look in the eye of a watchful world? If the scaffolding is up, is there any genuine building work going on behind it?

Let us all bear in mind that if we are Christ's workmanship, we must let our all-wise and loving Master have his own way. The disciple must not dictate to his Lord. We must allow Him to use his own tools. How much cutting and chiselling we often need! How keen and sharp also is the chisel which He sometimes uses! The sound of his hammers is constantly heard in his spiritual workshop; and with it are often heard the wondering cries of some sufferers who exclaim, "Why art Thou applying to me the file, the saw, or the hammer?" Be still, and know that whom He loveth He chasteneth. If such creatures as you and I are ever to become jewels in his crown, we must not draw back or murmur at the polishing. If we are his building, then let Him fashion us according to his divine idea of beauty, at whatever cost to selfishness or pride or indolence or vainglory. We must co-operate with our Lord and Saviour. Christ working at us and on us—and we working with Him and for Him—that is the process that produces such structures as He will present at last before his Father and the holy angels.

A Notable Bible Class.

AMONG teachers of young men and women, few laymen are privileged to address such audiences week by week as Mr. Samuel T. Baker, of the West United Free Church, Rutherglen. Mr. Baker had been for two years the teacher of another class, when, in 1869, he gathered round him the nucleus of the one over which he now presides. The meeting place at first was the kitchen of a two-roomed house, to which teacher and class were bidden heartily welcome by a godly widow, her limited sitting accommodation being supplemented by forms brought in for the occasion. In 1870 the house was no longer large enough, and a disused weaver's shop was taken possession of, the original earthen floor being covered over with wood, though the roof continued to be simply the floor of the room above.

This room served till 1874, when an important step in the progress of the work was marked by removal to a newly-built hall. In 1882, by invitation of the minister and kirk-session, Mr. Baker and his young friends went to meet in the church. Here we have a worker who has lost no atom of his faith in the charm and drawing power of the old Gospel. No attempt is made to bring in attractions for the mere sake of novelty, though no stone is left unturned to present the truth in the full blaze of the newest light that can be thrown upon it.

A Hopeful Field.

The gathering is a typical Bible class in all but size. A regular course of teaching in the facts and truths of Scripture is gone through year by year, individual characters from the Old and New Testaments and sketches of sacred history being special favourites. But the large numbers present a special opportunity for the preaching of the Gospel. The service is an evangelical one to which many young people can be induced to come, who are rarely in any other place of Christian worship, and the opportunity thus afforded of sowing the seed of the kingdom is not neglected. No evening passes on which the offer of salvation is not pressed home, and immediate decision for Christ urged on all.

This work is built up on the prayers, not of a few, but of many; and the seal of the Master's approval has many times shown that there was, in the midst of those who united their supplications, the Unseen Presence. In the Prayer Calendar of the class, Sabbath is reserved for "The Class Members, Committee and Teachers"; and Friday for "Personal Piety and Consecration."

The "At Home Missionary Society," under the control of Mrs. Baker, is a great source of mutual help to young women who can give one evening's work each week to the preparation of gifts for mission stations.

At the annual meeting a few days ago the report showed that the number of names on the roll is now 558, 115 having been added in the course of twelve months, and seventy-one withdrawn. The collections for missionary objects amounted to £73 4s. 11d. The topics for study during the current session are the Book of Genesis, the Parables of our Lord, and Mountain Scenes from Scripture. In addition to Mr. Baker, helpful addresses were delivered by Rev. Alexander S. Inch (Dumbarton) and Mr. William Sproat (Glasgow).

Elijah: The Prophet of all Time.

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A., of All Souls, W.

IV.—Death and Resurrection.

GOD'S chastisements are always for our profit. It was not in vain that both prophet and widow went through the furnace at Zarephath. The widow was brought into a fuller and clearer knowledge of Jehovah, and the prophet received a seal to his ministry such as none of God's servants had ever dreamt of before. He who had sought refuge in that quiet home, the object of a nation's bitter hatred, was fully vindicated as the one in whose mouth "the word of the Lord is truth."

The steps that led up to this glorious result are worth noticing. They illustrate four key-mottoes of the Christian life:—

MOTTO 1.

Trust and obey. The departure from Cherith, the journey through Samaria, the encounter with a widow so poor that she was forced to gather sticks by the highway, were all a severe test of Elijah's faith. He had to look, not at outward appearances, but at the word of the Lord. Every step of the way God's assurance, "I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee," was his only defence against a thousand fears.

Not so with the widow. To receive a guest beneath her roof when the bottom of the barrel of meal was already beginning to show; to nearly double the outgoings when her own resources were exhausted, with nothing but Elijah's "Thus saith the Lord" to depend upon, was indeed the obedience of faith. It seems easy to us, because we know that the barrel of meal wasted not, and the cruse of oil did not fail. But each meal almost exhausted the slender stock. If she had asked for a full barrel and a new cruse to start with, it would have been only what our hearts are always craving. We say, "Give us this day our daily bread," but we like to see an assured income between us and want.

But the woman was to learn a deeper lesson still. It may be summed up in the words, Remember and Repent. Before long God's hand was laid upon her son, and he fell sick and died. This awakened memories that had slumbered long. "Art thou come unto me to bring my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?"

We do not know whether it was her general sinfulness that was brought home to her, or some particular offence—some forgotten sin, covered over and buried in the rubbish heap of the past. Anyhow, the sense of sin was not awakened until death threatened her home, and her own son paid the first instalment of the dread penalty of sin.

And yet surely she had not been resisting God's grace. The word of the Lord in Elijah's mouth had not been rejected by her. Heaven's calm must have pervaded those quiet days, when every meal was a eucharist, and mother and son received their first course of Bible lessons, and never tired of hearing of the wonderful doings of Elijah's God. It was the most peaceful period in Elijah's whole career, when, as the first apostle to the Gentiles, he sowed the seed of eternal life in those two honest and simple hearts, and helped to prepare the young lad, if we may place any reliance upon Jewish tradition, for the important mission to Nineveh on which God afterwards sent him.

It needed death, however, to bring about in this widow a true sense of sin. As suggested by Rev. H. T. Howat in his "Life of Elijah," "Grace and Truth" are both needed for the development of true faith. Grace was manifest in the daily supply of food. Truth shone forth with awful and searching power in the death of her son. Grace revealed the goodness of God—Truth made pass the evil of her own heart. Conscience is apt to slumber while the barrel is being replenished daily. We take our mercies as a matter of course. When God's Word finds us out, when the Spirit's voice reaches our hearts, we see that our sins deserve death. This is the message of Calvary. Well is it with those who learn the lesson there. Alas for any who only discover it when death begins to claim its due.

Voltaire cried out for mercy on his death-bed, though he had lived to deride the Bible and all faith in God. Shelley knelt on the deck of his ship, during a storm in the Mediterranean, and prayed to God for protection a few days after signing his name "Atheos" in the visitor's book of an hotel in Greece.

God's people, as well as the careless and ungodly, need to remember and repent. We all need a clearer view of the sinfulness of sin—a deeper sense of our unworthiness of all God's mercies. There is no growth in grace without this, and sometimes truth has to shine forth in judgment to bring it about.

MOTTO 3.

Our third motto is, Ask and receive. There are deep mysteries in life which yield to nothing but prayer.

What a tangle there was in that home! How mysterious, how, from the human standpoint, inexplicable the blow that had fallen! We are always prejudiced against God by nature, and unwilling to accept judgment without murmuring. But, in this case, God's dealings must have seemed terribly severe.

Bitter, cutting, and indignant words fell from this widow's lips: "What have I to do with thee, thou man of God? Is this the reward for my hospitality? Did I open my home to thee that thou mightest mock me with my sin and slay my child?"

Who does not pity Elijah as he saw the child stricken with grievous sickness, and realized that death was drawing near. Who does not admire the prophet's gentleness and self-control as he meets the embittered scorn of the widow with the words, "Give me your child"?

There is one explanation, however, of all these mysterious and inexplicable dealings of God's providence. They are sent to teach us the value of prayer, to draw us out of ourselves, and to make us lay hold of that power of God, which reaches even beyond the grave.

What a prayer was this of Elijah's. He asked for a boon, such as it had never entered before into the heart of man to demand.

He first seems to remonstrate with God, not in the way of complaint, but expressing his conviction, surely divinely wrought, that there was a further sequel to God's dealings. That death, which was filling the quiet home at Zarephath with bitter despair, could not be God's last word to the widow. So he asks for the son to be restored. How his prayer transcends all our ideas concerning acceptable prayer! It was an unconditional prayer, a prayer for a temporal boon, a prayer for a miracle! What boldness! It would be impossible, it would be presumptuous for anyone who was not living in close touch with God; but "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence," and those who are near enough to God may often ask what they will.

Dr. Krummacher mentions a similar case of confident prayer in the life of Martin Luther. "His friend Myconius lay on his death bed, and wrote him a farewell letter. Luther, after reading the letter, immediately fell on his knees and began to pray, 'O Lord, my God, Thou must not yet take our brother Myconius to thyself, thy cause will not prosper without him.' After praying thus, he rose up and wrote to his sick friend, "There is no cause for fear; the Lord will not let me hear that thou art dead; you shall not and must not die." The letter made such an impression on the dying man, and so stirred him, that the ulcer in his lungs discharged itself, and he recovered. "I wrote to you that it would be so," answered Luther to the letter which announced the recovery of his friend.

To us the Saviour says, "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name. Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full."

Prayer is still all-powerful along the line of God's will. We, too, may know the power of Christ's resurrection; indeed a measure of resurrection power should be manifest in our lives, if we are indeed risen with Christ.

MOTTO 4.

Love and know, is the fourth motto illustrated by this story.

It is beyond our power even to conceive the deep effect upon this widow of her son's resurrection. "Behold now I know that thou art a man of God," was the widow's comment. Clearly the bitterness had given place to love. She had learnt that God only wounds to heal.

The prophet had learnt more than he expected to know of the abounding, overflowing character of the love of God. He had found that God's compassions extend beyond the covenant with Israel, and reach even to the heathen. There was deeper and larger love in the widow's heart, there was tenderer and larger love in the prophet's heart, and God was more fully known by both. To that sorely-stricken mother we might apply the words of Tennyson:—

> Her eyes are homes of silent prayer,
> Nor other thought her heart admits;
> But he was dead, and there he sits,
> And he that brought him back is there.

It is always by loving that we learn to know. "Rooted and grounded in love," we are "able to comprehend . . . and to know." And this deeper love often comes through some Gethsemane experience, some hour of spiritual anguish. Love grows in a broken heart, and if the heart does not break beneath daily mercies, when the barrel of meal does not waste, and the cruse of oil does not fail, God may use the rod of judgment.

Yet this is done, not because God has any pleasure in afflicting us, but because He wants so to break up our hearts, that He can pour in and draw out a deeper or fuller tide of love. "God is Love." There is nothing higher than God; there is nothing in religion greater than Love.

"Alone, Yet Not Alone."

(Copyright.)

"Yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me" (John xvi. 32).

"Left alone"—yet not alone—
Sweetest fellowship is known (1 John i. 7),
When the soul in God finds rest (John viii. 29), Solitude with Him is blest.

"Left alone"—He draws so near,
Soothing grief and calming fear (Lam. iii. 57),
Teaching truths no tongue can tell (Psa. cxix. 102)—
Proofs that all He does is well.

"Left alone"—He satisfies,
Severed though earth's dearest ties (Psa. lxxiii. 25).
Sympathy and comfort sweet (John xi. 32-35)
Still are found at Jesus' feet.

'Tis in hours of loneliness,
He reveals his preciousness (2 Tim. iv. 16, 17);
Fully does his love sustain (Psa. xli. 3),
In adversity and pain.

No discordant note with Him,
No reproach—when faith grows dim (Matt. xii. 21)
Not a word his child need speak (Psa. xxxviii. 9).
Well He knows "the flesh is weak"—

"Willing though the spirit be."
Every effort He can see (Matt. xxvi. 41);
While the longing soul He feeds (Jer. xxxi. 25),
Comprehending inmost needs.

"Not alone"—when called to die,
Though no earthly friend be nigh (Psa. xlviii. 14),
Life is "leaning on his breast" (Isa. lvii. 2),
Death—but "entrance into rest."

Blind Children in East London.—The home and school for blind children founded by Miss S. Rye, have proved a boon to many parents whose children are afflicted with a loss of sight. Applicants are eligible for admission to the home between the ages of five and sixteen, irrespective of religious distinction. They must either be totally blind or not possessed of sufficient sight to attend an ordinary school. The past year has been one of considerable activity, as well as increased expenditure involved by the expiration of the lease of Northumberland House. Suitable premises were secured in Warwick Road, Upper Clapton. Here the workers are seeking with renewed energy to ameliorate the sad condition of the little ones committed to their care. Accommodation is provided for thirty children, and the institution is open two days a week for inspection by visitors.

The Unseen Footsteps.*

By the late ANNA SHIPTON.

"He divided the sea, and caused them to pass through; and He made the waters to stand as an heap" (Psa. lxxviii. 13).

"Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (John xx. 21).

THE hairs of your head are all numbered. If the life of Christ on earth were carefully considered in its minute detail, we should have more practical illustration of doctrine than that which we derive from theories which men give of how we ought to walk. The pivots on which many mighty events have turned are unheeded, and yet, so far from derogating from the might and majesty of the great Artificer, they magnify Him. The same hand which created the stars, and made them move in their courses, formed the little glow-worm's lamp, and bade it shine in its mossy home. There is nothing too minute to work the work of God.

Withdraw the fish, the gourd, the worm, the east wind, which "God prepared," from the book of Jonah, and how should we understand his dealing with his wayward servant? How much should we lose of the longsuffering and lovingkindness of Him who manifested Himself of old, as He manifests Himself to-day, in dealing with his children according to their necessities, leading them by paths which they know not, to work out his wonders, as He alone knows; "for He looketh to the ends of the earth, and seeth under the whole heaven."

Therefore, in abiding in Him you serve, it is better to be conscious of Himself than conscious of any success. It was, it is, a solemn thing to be sent of God. Moses shrank from it before the unbelief of his people and the anticipated scorn of his enemies. "Send by whom Thou wilt send" was the expression of his reluctance, which angered the God who had called him to that mighty work as leader of his chosen people. Jeremiah, from his conscious weakness, would excuse himself: "Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child." Isaiah shrank from testimony by reason of his sense of sinfulness: "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips." But the Lord God, when He sends a messenger, goes with him. "Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (John xx. 21). "Lo, I am with you alway" (Matt. xxviii. 20). That glory which overcame Isaiah has been veiled in the likeness of the Man that Ezekiel beheld on the throne, who paid his earthly tribute to the kings of the earth through the piece of money in the mouth of a fish, the creature of his hand. He has been "despised and rejected of men; a Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief;" but He is in us and with us now, as we go to and fro, and follow in his footsteps, to carry unconsciously the message He designs to send. Oh, to be faithful! to abide in Him, that we may not be ashamed! For He that shall come will come, shrouded no more in the bruised and lacerated flesh, but in the bright effulgence of his Father's glory which is to be revealed! Therefore, to any who mourn their lack of service, I would say, "Be of good cheer. Abide in Christ. He went about doing good; and think you that He cannot do the same in you? You may not see the fruitage of the seed until the harvest-home; and though your steps are circumscribed, limit not the power of Him who dwelleth in his temple, and let it not be said of you, 'He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief.'"

"Christ Liveth in Me."

(Gal. ii. 20.)

In Christ I live—He is my life,
How safe to trust in Him,
To feel removed from outward strife.
To triumph over sin.

In Christ I live—He is my life,
And peace, and joy, and rest,
Oh! come to Him, and thou shalt find
Thy spirit always blest.

* From The Watch Tower in the Wilderness. (1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott)

A Mother's Prayer.

IT was a stormy Sunday evening, but the weather had not affected the congregation of a large mission hall in one of our great cities; and when, at half-past six, the service commenced, the spacious building was crowded. Not so crowded, however, but that a few more could be edged in, and when, towards the close of the first hymn, a late comer appeared, there was great readiness, by means of a little extra compression, to make room for him.

It was only a navvy, in work-stained attire, but he seemed quite unaware of any discrepancy between his appearance and the occasion, and marched in and took the place assigned to him with an air of decision that harmonized well with his splendid physique, a fit representative of a class of British workman of whom England may well be proud.

As the service proceeded he listened attentively, as though every word was a message to him. At the close of the service a loving invitation was given for any inquirers to come into the vestries. He lost not a single moment, but rising from his seat, passed hurriedly along the aisle, and through the door at the back of the hall. Here one of the workers was startled by the unusual form of address.

"Look here, mister, does that preacher mean what he says?"

"Certainly," was the rather curt reply.

"And do you think the Lord Jesus would save me to-night?"

"Of course, if you are willing," said the gentleman, in a softened tone, for he was beginning to feel an interest in the big fellow standing before him and questioning him so eagerly. "Willing! I am that, and I'd like it settled straight away."

"Would you like to see the minister?" "Aye, I should that, if he wouldn't think it's too much trouble to come." And very soon the faithful evangelist was sitting by the inquirer's side, and listening to his explanation.

"I had no thought of being here to-night, parson. I've been an unthinking fellow since I left home and my old mother, two-and-a-half years ago. Such a saint mother was, and a widow too; and I her only lad. Not that I've been as bad as many of my mates by a long chalk, thank God; but that's all because I couldn't get away from thoughts of her and her prayers. But I've never written to her, nor sent her money when I've earned good wages, and many a time I've drunk just to get rid of my uneasy thoughts, and to-night I was feeling downright miserable, and I set off for a bit of a spree; but as I came down the street past the Hall, the singing sounded just heavenly—I used to be in our choir at home—and I just longed to come in and have a good sing in decent company once more; and I got into the porch, and had my hand on the door, and then I remembered that I had never changed nor washed myself, and I was back in the street like a shot, thinking I would match the "Green Dragon" better than a place of worship. But somehow, try as I would, I could not get away from that door and that singing! Such a pull as I never felt before in my life was dragging me back again.

"I tried to bargain with myself that I'd have a decent rig-out and put up an appearance next Sunday, but it was no use, and before I well knew what I was doing I was up the steps, in at the door, and stuck fast in a seat; and very soon I knew from your discourse that it was the Lord that had been calling me, and that He wanted me; and sometimes I think He's softened my heart, and if only He'll help me I'll be a good lad and go home to mother."

When the heart is thus opened by the Divine hand, human teaching becomes an easy and happy thing, and that night the good missioner had the joy of witnessing the coming home of another prodigal to the waiting, welcoming Father; and Tom Mellor, as he wrung his kind friend's hand at parting, exclaimed joyfully, "Aye, but I have got a comfortable feeling at my heart! I have for sure! And next Saturday I'll be off to see mother, and try to make up to her for all the trouble I've given her."

On Wednesday in the same week the missioner was conducting a service in a smaller town, many miles away, and during his sermon a strange impulse came upon him to tell of the navvy's conversion on the Sunday night. He resisted the impression for awhile, feeling that the narration would be incongrous to his subject, but finally had to yield, and simply told the story. As he descended from the rostrum he was met by a respectable-looking old woman, who tremblingly asked him if he knew the name of the navvy, and when he told her she exclaimed, "I thought so! That's my boy!"

And she told, in a simple, pathetic way, how, on the previous Sunday, she had thought, with even more than usual yearning, of her wandering boy, and then had set out for the evening service. But her shawl was thin, and her steps feeble, and when she had only gone half the distance she encountered a heavy storm of rain and sleet, and turned into a neighbour's house for shelter. She, also, was a widow and a woman of earnest piety and strong faith, and was very prompt in her suggestion that, as it seemed impossible for either of them to attend public worship that night, they should have a little prayer-meeting all by themselves instead; and, knowing her friend's great anxiety about Tom, she proposed that he should be the special subject of their intercession. And at half-past-six o'clock, they were both on their knees crying unto the Lord in their trouble. They knew nothing of Tom's whereabouts, but God knew, and at that very hour in a city many miles away, He led the prodigal to his Father's house, and saved the poor widow, though her eyes were still holden concerning the deliverance, out of her distress. Only a week ago I heard this incident from a minister to whom this missioner had told it, and I pass it on to any amongst the readers of The Christian whose special family trials render valuable and necessary a fresh testimony to the power of prayer.

Oxford Letter.

REV. W. J. HEYWOOD was the chief speaker at the Methodist Free Church Missionary Meeting on Wednesday last. Speaking of the work in China, he denied that missionaries were responsible for the troubles there. In so far as they had enlightened the mandarins, and darkness and light were incompatible, they might be held responsible, but he pleaded for two things in the interest of peace: that no official status be given to any Roman Catholic priest or any other missionary, and that the Empress Dowager be no longer allowed to retain any imperial authority.

Oxford has lost in the death of Mr. George Wheelhouse one of its most devoted workers. For thirty-two years he has been a well-known figure in the city, and by his devotion and zeal has gained the respect of all members of the Christian Church, and the love and affection of very many. His open-air meetings at the Martyrs' Memorial, held for many years, have been well attended. Rev. Canon Christopher, at the funeral, told the story of Mr. Wheelhouse's conversion through his wife. In many ways his career has been a remarkable one, and is another proof of the power of God's grace and of his willingness to use those who are wholly yielded to his will.

The autumnal meeting of the Oxford Free Church Council was held on Thursday, and was an interesting and helpful gathering from the nature of the subjects discussed. Among these were the Simultaneous Mission of last winter, the Temperance Mission, and the education question. Professor Massie was unable to be present, but sent a report of the Council's work. On the subject of education he said he agreed with the Bishop of Oxford in the importance the latter gave to religious education, but he did not agree when the Bishop interpreted this as "the full and whole faith of the Church."

The Bishop of Oxford used a very happy illustration and telling one, too, when distributing the prizes to the boys of the high school on Thursday. Referring to his visit to the railway carriage works at Wolverton, he pointed out how each part of the waggon passed through different men's hands, and if the waggon came to grief the weak spot could be traced to its author. So in life, said the Bishop, if we shirk our school work or any part of it, if habits are indulged in, it will in time show itself, and the ruin of a life is often traced to this slackness, shirking, or scamping.

The Voice of Jesus.

By LUCY A. BENNETT.

"I that speak unto thee am He" (John iv. 26).

HAD the dim dawning of any true conception of her Stranger-Companion's claim come to the woman of Samaria when she intimated—and surely it was with a sigh—the necessity of deferring till the coming of the Messias the settlement of the great questions under discussion? It would seem that no such thought had entered her mind. The simplicity and directness of her own words throughout, and the exceedingly literal way in which his words were taken by her, alike forbid the supposition that any secret suspicion or hidden inquiry lurked in the remark with which she expected, probably, to close the conversation: "I know that Messias cometh, which is called Christ; when He is come He will tell us all things."

The candour and the humility of the woman attract us, even as they undoubtedly found favour with the Lord Jesus Himself; and it hardly surprises us that to this lonely and despised toiler He made the first full revelation of Himself on record, in terms, too, entirely unmistakable, and such as crafty scribes and supercilious Pharisees many a time sought in vain to evoke. "I that speak unto thee am He."

She had acknowledged Him as "prophet"; but it was, she affirmed, "the Messias" alone who could answer her heart's sad questionings. And He, in the plentitude of his grace, met her on her own grounds, winning her confidence, and her confession, too, by the startling announcement, "I that speak unto thee am He." She seems to have had no words for reply; but the strength and certainty of her conviction found vent in action, and the testimony of this early home missionary was one which inspired confidence; such confidence as only they inspire whose own hearts have been stirred by the message they bear. "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us." Such is the secret of successful service. It is interesting to note that her faith laid hold of the graciously granted sign for which she was on the look-out. "When He is come He will tell us all things," she said. And in strict agreement was her testimony, "He told me all that ever I did."

The instance which most closely resembles that at Sychar is, perhaps, the later revelation to the man who was born blind. Here, too, was a grave, earnest, and grateful spirit, apparently seeking the truth, and ready to confess the truth as far as known. "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" was our Lord's direct appeal, seeking out the uninstructed but dauntless confessor; and in this case do we not detect a dawning intelligence in the reverent and reasonable reply, "Who is He, Lord, that I might believe on Him?" (John ix. 36.)

Almost as much as at Samaria's well, our pulses are throbbed with sympathy as we overhear the quiet but thrilling answer, "It is He that talketh with thee." Into the solemnity of such soul-scenes we may not often gaze. And when the veil is lifted, we cannot gaze without a deepened sense of awe and adoring love to Him whose skilful care suits the treatment to the individual necessity of the case. With Christ there was no stereotyped method of dealing; ever conspicuous was the tender considerateness of the particular person with whom He dealt. And He is still "the same Jesus," definitely caring for the units.

Not in every case is there the distinct and definite remembrance of time and place at which, to our hearts, first came the soul-quickening sense of contact,—the over-powering discovery that the Lord Himself stood self-announced in our midst. But surely to every one of us who knows his name the time has come, the place has been, when from the environments of circumstances, from the tumult of agonized convictions, above the voice of accusing conscience, and above the human pleading of God's ambassadors, that Divine voice has reached us. "He it is who speaketh with thee." "I that speak unto thee am He." To hear that voice is to live. "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." "He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent Me hath everlasting life" (John v. 24, 25).

A TOO COMMON MISTAKE.

What we are in danger of, perhaps, is a slowness still to listen, at every turn, for that loving, living voice. How often we fail to derive the full blessing from some sorrowful dispensation, some pending trial, some actual and present pain or loss, all because we are too engrossed with other comforters and other counsellors to catch the "still, small voice" which would interpret to us aright the meaning of it all! So readily we seize on secondary causes—what we might have done to avert the seeming evil; what we may yet still do to escape from it! And all the while there standeth ONE among us, known indeed, but unrecognized, who waits to hush the heart's eager questioning with his own, "It is I," "I that speak unto thee am He." Strange that He has to plead so often with us—"Hearken"!

No amount of busy service would, even to the earthly beloved ones, atone for an unwillingness to listen to their words. A friend who will listen is sometimes a greater comforter even than one who will speak wise and tender words. And though God values our confession of his Name, our testimony and our zeal, yet He lays even more stress upon the "hearkening" to his own voice. "My sheep hear my voice . . and they follow Me" (John x. 27). "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams" (1 Sam. xv. 22). The object of hearkening is, of course, to do the will of God, but the doing that is not accompanied by the hearkening will rarely, if ever, be acceptable and effectual.

"His servants ye are to whom ye obey;" and how can they in any real sense be servants, pleasing to the Master, who give no heed to directions? The voice of Jehovah "from the excellent glory" gave one charge: "This is My beloved Son, hear Him." And that beloved Son Himself, in words of unutterable sweetness, claims close kindred with such as "hear the Word of God and do it" (Luke viii. 21). "Oh that thou hadst hearkened!" is the pathetic lament over backsliding Israel. Nor are we left in doubt as to the character of the loss sustained by indifference and disobedience. "Then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea."

"Hearken, O daughter" (Psa. xlv. 10); "Hearken to me, O children" (Isa. viii. 32); "Hearken, ye people" (Isa. xxxiv. 1); "Hearken unto me, O house of Israel" (Isa. xlviii. 12); "Hearken, ye that follow after righteousness" (Isa. li. 1); "Hearken ye that know righteousness" (verse 7); "Hearken, O earth, and all therein" (Micah i. 2); "O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord" (Jer. xxii. 29).

Such are a few only of the many calls by which Jehovah, in virtue of their varied relationships to Himself, seeks to arrest the attention of his slumbering people.

"Hearken to me every one of you," is another comprehensive summons, whilst his reiterated injunction cannot be forgotten—"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." Would to God that the attitude of our souls habitually was that of young Samuel, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

What untold blessing would be the result? The angels hearken (Psa. ciii. 20), and shall we be indifferent? "He will speak peace to his people" is an assurance which should stimulate us to hush our souls. "I will hear what God the Lord will speak." "Whoso hearkeneth unto Me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil." The very prevalence of unquiet fears is swift witness against us.

May we not believe that many a chastisement might be spared if we were more quick to take heed to the restraining voice?

> Blest wilderness, which made me prove
> A Saviour's power, a Father's love,
> Where the world's din died on mine ear,
> That I, in secret, God might hear.
> Ne'er had I known his power to bless,
> Had I not known the wilderness,

Many of us may have had to praise God in terms similar to this; and yet, while thankful for the wilderness-lessons, is it really true to say that God's power to bless may not be learnt in another way? "My people would not hearken" explains many a painful discipline which the Father's heart would joyfully have spared his disregarding and wayward child.

There are more ways than one of refusing. Not only open rebellion calls for the caution, but indifference and inattention may, almost as really, lose us the divine utterances. It was to a Church—a lukewarm Church, with Christ outside—that the offer is made, "If any man will hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him, and he with Me." To the listening individual heart, even in the midst of prevailing apostasy and failure, God will speak. "He that hath an ear, let him hear."

Primarily and most of all, it is to the written Word we must take heed; making "the sure word of prophecy" the touchstone whereby all other prophecies are tried.

But then, as well, walking in the way of his commandments, we shall hear the living Word Himself, who will open to us the Scriptures, and with added words of guidance and tender sympathy will make our hearts burn within us. Let us expect this, let us look out for it, "watching daily at his gates" for the footfall of Deity; coveting "the secret of the Lord" as our portion. That secret He will reveal to those who habitually walk with Him, and recline on his bosom.

> They know it, and with quiet heart,
> Have learnt—are learning still—
> That not a single good outlies
> The circle of his will.

All life, all service—and may we not add all suffering?—become simple when the truth is once grasped that it is Christ only we have to please, Christ only to obey, Christ only "with whom we have to do."

From the rush and turmoil of this peaceless age we may turn to Him and echo back his own words of loving entreaty to his Bride, "Let me hear thy voice . . . for sweet is thy voice." And there shall come to us, as certainly and clearly as to the simple-hearted seekers of old, his assurance, "I that speak unto thee am He." "It is He that speaketh with thee."

> Oh, give me Samuel's ear,
> The open ear, O Lord!
> Alive and quick to hear
> Each whisper of thy Word;
> Like him to answer at thy call,
> And to obey Thee first of all.

In Southern Russia.

VII.—Among the Mennonites.

ON leaving Sebastopol we travelled past Inkerman. There is a convent, curiously fixed in the rock itself. Our lady friend, who accompanied us to the next prison as interpreter, told us that this was in memory of those who, during the battle of October 24, 1854, fell down the steep wall of the high plateau.

After a few hours we reached Ssimferopol and, after visiting the prison, proceeded by train at midnight, en route for Melitopol, a little town in the Taurida Government.

Travelling thence by an omnibus-like carriage with four horses abreast, quite a new world opened before us in the light of the rising sun. For about thirty versts* we did not pass through a single village, nor was there a single tree or bush to be seen as far as eye could reach; yet there were evident signs of toil upon the land. The labourers often sleep where they work, in the open air.

As we advanced we saw at last a fine estate before us, and handsome country house, surrounded by farm buildings, where we were heartily welcomed as guests by the same kind friend who cared for our comfort as we entered Russia.

In the afternoon another carriage took us seventeen versts further, to a model farm owned by the brother of our previous host, and here, also, we were royally entertained. On the way we passed several settlements which, by their neatness, cleanliness, and evident prosperity, stood in marked contrast with the generality of Russian villages.

AMONG THE MENNONITES.

This Mennonite Colony looks like a miniature Germany within the vast Russian Empire. During the five days that our visit lasted, we drove 270 versts, visited several villages, and entered different homes of various conditions, receiving everywhere the impression of a prosperity simply enjoyed, the outcome of diligence, energy, and perseverance.

The first colony of Mennonites was formed in 1789 in the Government Ekaterinoslav. Katharine II., anxious to have her bare southern regions peopled by industrious settlers who knew how to cultivate the land, and who would be an example to her own subjects, offered great inducements to immigrants from Germany, Holland, and France. Hundreds of families thus settled on the Volga.

This first attempt, though a failure in many instances, did not deter the energetic ruler from further experiments. The Mennonites, already known by Peter the Great, had a reputation for sobriety, industry, and sterling character. To them she now extended many privileges, among which were permanent exemption from military service and the free exercise of their religion. As many as 280 families responded to the first call.

The second colony, which we were now visiting, was founded on the river Moloczna in 1804. The settlers were of Dutch origin, who under the persecution of Charles V. and Philip II. of Spain had immigrated into Prussia. Among themselves they still speak a language midway between Dutch and German (Plattdeutsch). True to expectation, the bare tracts of land given them by the Government have under their hands yielded rich products of Indian corn, wheat, rye, barley, &c., and trees have grown up where none had been before. There are about 60,000 Mennonites in the various colonies. These are an Eldorado for the Russian peasants, who at the approach of spring come in swarms to seek work for the summer, and generally remain from May till October. Though serfdom has ceased since 1861, they are still badly off for want of personal property. The soil is owned by the Government, and therefore not cultivated as it probably would be if each peasant had his own portion to cultivate.

In 1880 the Mennonites were threatened with military service, which is contrary to their religious principles. To avoid it, many families sold their belongings much below their value, and emigrated to Canada and the United States and to Turkestan. Alarmed by this, the Russian Government sent Count Todleben, the hero of Sebastopol, to negotiate with them, and they accepted forest instead of military service, thereby undertaking the keeping and planting of forests at their own expense. Every young man, physically fit, has to spend four years in this occupation. The officers are Russians, but the spiritual care and supervision are in the hands of a Mennonite brother.

In former years their education was wholly German, so that some of them speak little or no Russian. For the last fourteen years, however, the Government has insisted upon appointing teachers to their schools to spread the language of the country. To five German lessons per week, over twenty are given in Russian. This step, so characteristic of Russian policy, has probably been taken to counteract the increase of German influence. Estates, abandoned by Russian country gentry as unprofitable, have been bought up and successfully worked by Mennonite farmers; hence the fear that the Germans may get into possession of the land without a sword stroke.

It surprises one to find that subjects of foreign nationality should enjoy more freedom than the natives themselves. The Mennonites, for instance, have themselves, but are not permitted to evangelize outside their own communities. The man who attempts it exposes himself to exile. Mennonites of either sex who marry Russians exclude themselves from the privileges of their peoples they and their families become Russians, and therefore members of the Greek Church.

The Mennonites do not spend much money upon their churches. There are no towers or ornaments, nor even a text on the white-washed walls; but everywhere one finds scrupulous cleanliness. The fear of "forms" seems to have thrown them into the opposite extreme.

To please a traditional custom, every married woman wears some kind of bonnet, not hat, while attending the service. Everybody can read, yet the hymns are read out a line or two at a time, and sung in a "dragging" manner. Their ministry consists of elders, preachers, and deacons. They have adult baptism by sprinkling.

On the Sunday following our arrival we attended a missionary anniversary at Halbstadt. In the morning a letter was read from their missionary in Java, speaking of encouraging work among the children. In the afternoon Mr. Nikkels, a missionary, gave an account of his work in Sumatra, where the Mennonites have three mission stations. He made appreciative reference to Miss Needham, who had spent the later years of a devoted life among the natives of Sumatra, and who is gratefully remembered by everybody who knew her there. She died in May, 1897.

Evangelistic meetings were arranged for, daily during our stay, in the various villages. Dr. Baedeker's presence is always hailed as that of a spiritual father in the colony, where his spiritual family is particularly large. Notwithstanding the absence of facilities for communication, the meetings were well known from village to village. The goodwill of the inhabitants proved an effective substitute for telegraph and telephone. While adopting every improvement likely to advance their agricultural pursuits, they do not exercise themselves to adopt each new invention, or to be up to date in everything. At the last meeting one of the brethren gave a touching testimony as to how the Lord had led him to give up hunting. He had long felt that it interfered with his spiritual growth, but still he clung to his gratification. Then he broke his leg, and his conscience had told him that he should abstain from what had become to him an absorbing passion and snare; but as soon as his limb was healed he returned to it again.

Then his child became dangerously ill. In his anxiety he fell one day upon his knees, asking the Lord to be merciful to him, and to heal his child, and determined to give up hunting. The next day, to the surprise of all, the child seemed restored to health; but the devil whispered into the father's ear, "This is only a coincidence. It is better not to take any notice of it." On hearing his wife in the afternoon talk with the governess about this marvellous recovery, he could not restrain himself any longer, but confessed all. The child has kept well, and he has never hunted since. And now the Lord, who had so manifestly answered his prayers, led him to give his testimony among his brethren. Will they accept him? His manly voice broke as he asked that, and tears were in nearly all eyes. This was our closing meeting, and surely the Lord kept the best wine until last.

We dined that day with a lady whose husband had died away from home, having been obliged to take refuge beyond the frontier on account of his Gospel testimony among the Russians. In the afternoon we visited in another village the Mennonite a splendid building, open to all nationalities. The work was begun in 1882 by an Armenian, Hambarzumoff. Thirteen years ago the present premises were built. There are about thirty pupils now, some of whom are Jews, all taught to speak by the Vetter system. Bible-teaching is made prominent and obligatory.

In order to see a Mennonite Forest Academy on our way to the station, we started early in the afternoon of the following day. Our host showed us the little dwelling of his grandmother, where Alexander I. once asked hospitality. In the absence of her husband she did her best for the accommodation of her royal guest. Not being, however, able to add to the space of the house, most of the imperial suite had to sleep in the stables. To a question as to the purpose of his visit, the reply was: "Chiefly to see his Mennonites, as the Czar then called them, and so to encourage them in their labours."

Fruits of the Valley.

Cant. vi. 11.

In the valleys of affliction
Bloometh many a lovely flower;
'Tis that they may cull and wear them,
And with other sufferers share them,
That God leads his children there:
Light affliction for an hour,
But in heaven a richer dower.
(Gen. xli. 52; Cant. ii. 6; 2 Cor. i. 4-7; 2 Cor. iv. 16-18).

Art thou come to Vale of Achor?
Door of hope it yet shall be;
Vineyards thence, and full fruition
Shall enrich thy soul's condition,
And the vale of trouble prove,
Place where hearts shall be set free
From the world's captivity,
(Josh. vii. 24-26; Hos. ii. 15; Is. lxv. 10).

Passing thro' the Vale of Baca,
Springs of joy eternal rise,
It becomes a vale of blessing,
And by faith its fruits possessing,
They shall go from strength to strength;
Grace shines forth from tear-dimmed eyes,
As at sunset April's skies.
(Psa. lxxxiv. 6; Psa. civ. 10; 2 Chron. xx. 26; Heb. xii. 11).

For the vale of mourning leadeth
To the vale of vision clear,
As in shining after raining,
When a wider view obtaining
Distances unveil to sight,
Bringing the far-off so near
That the City gates appear.
(Zech. xii. 11; Is. xxii. 5; Isa. xxxiii. 17.)

For the land to which God leadeth
Is a land of vale and hill,
Corn and fig and olive growing,
Pomegranates and brooklets flowing,
Eshcol's vineyards that shall yield
Fruits, when heavenly dews distil
O'er the heart that trusts his will.
(Deut. viii. 7; Deut. xi. 11; Num. xiii. 17, 23; Psa. lxv. 13.)

Every vale shall be exalted
In the furrows light is sown,
When the mountain path descendeth
Know it yet again ascendeth;
Shadowed valleys lead to heights
Higher than the depths went down;
Glory death's dark vale shall crown.
(Isa. xl. 4; Psa. xcvii. 11; Joel iii. 14-18; Psa. xxiii. 4.)

"BEGIN WITH THE CHILDREN,"

Lord Shaftesbury used to say—and he was right!

For nearly sixty years this has been the work of the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION,

AND SHAFTESBURY SOCIETY,

of which he was the practical Founder.

The Society is a DISTINCTLY CHRISTIAN ORGANISATION, an ally of the Church and an embodiment of the spirit of The Good Samaritan.

The Council now EARNESTLY PLEADS for CHRISTMAS CHEER and LIBERAL HELP, that the healing oil of CHRISTIAN SYMPATHY, as well as the equally necessary "twopence" may not be lacking for those in DISTRESS and MISERY.

The Society has affiliated with it 152 LOCAL MISSION CENTRES in the congested districts of London. It thus reaches AT LEAST 100,000 SOULS weekly, through its manifold agencies, sustained by Over 5,000 Voluntary Workers.

It has a sensible scheme for Helping the Bootless,

Clothing the Ragged, and Feeding the Hungry.

It has a Register of over SIX THOUSAND CRIPPLED CHILDREN in their own homes—poor AFFLICTED LITTLE ONES, who need "MOST EVERYTHING," their SPIRITUAL INTERESTS being always paramount.

It sends away many hundreds of pale faced Children and Adults to its Holiday Homes at the Seaside each year, in addition to giving over 51,000 poor children a Day in the Country.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Christmas Gifts, Contributions and Toys, Books for the Children, Clothing, Boots, &c., should be sent to the Secretary,

MR. JOHN KIRK,
Ragged School Union, 32, John Street, Theobald's Road, London, W.C.,

Or to—

Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT, at the Offices of "The Christian."

WORKING MEN'S MISSION,

COLLINGWOOD STREET, NEW CUT, and other Branches.

This Mission is conducted in one of the most depraved neighbourhoods of London, the New Cut being well known for its wretched and criminal surroundings. The daily work of our Mission is to and bring them to a knowledge of the Mighty to Save.

"RESCUE THE PERISHING, CARE FOR THE DYING,"

YOUR HELP IS NEEDED to assist us in helping those who cannot possibly help themselves.

In addition to preaching the Gospel, we provided over 100,000 meals to adults and poor children.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Superintendents, T. and J. YOUNG, 33, Nelson Square, Blackfriars, S.E., or the Office of "The Christian."

BIBLE LANDS MISSIONS' AID SOCIETY.

FOUNDED 1854.

Office:—7, Adam Street, Strand, W.C. Rev. W. A. ESSERY, Hon. Sec.

From great national causes our income was so reduced last year, that many of the works we usually help were only partially assisted, and some not at all. The Lord's impoverished workers pathetically press us to send them our Aids this year. We need a generous increase of £750 to do so. The Readers of "The Christian" have ever been our most generous contributors, and to you we appeal in our present need. Kindly send to the Hon. Sec., or to the Office of "The Christian." KINNAIRD, Treasurer.

Mission of Help to the Suffering Poor.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED

To provide Coals, Bread, and Groceries for the sick, aged, and destitute poor, and to supply them with warm Clothing through the winter.

THE DARKEST ENGLAND SOCIAL SCHEME:

Its Christ-like Work and Urgent Need.

DEAR FRIEND,

Can you send me any help for our great family of the Poorest, the Outcast, the Criminal, the Wounded in Life's battle? No less than 6,000 poor men, women, and children sleep under our roofs nightly, and are helped for Christ's sake. Yet we turn them away in hundreds through lack of room. Our devoted Slum-women who live, visit, and tend the sick and dying in the darkest slums—49,091 visits in London alone last year—know not where to turn for the needed help for their work. Please send me something to make Christmas bright for our thousands of terribly needy ones, who feel their lot all the more keenly because of the Christmas gladness of others.

THE EMPTY CUPBOARD.

At Home and Abroad no less than 6,989,983 meals were supplied to destitute men, women and children, and 4,302,030 lodged last year!

1,669 ex-criminals were received into our Refuges, and 5,976 women into our Rescue Homes during the past twelve months.

Help sent to me at 101, Queen Victoria Street, London, or to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN, will be gratefully acknowledged.

Cheques should be made payable to WILLIAM BOOTH.

SICK POOR
— IN —
SOUTHWARK.

Southwark is the poorest district in all London. It is deplorably overcrowded, and a large amount of sickness is inevitable besides the casualties incidental to the life of a vast working-class, riverside neighbourhood.

The outlook for the poor this winter is much darker than for many years past. Great numbers are out of work, and there is much distress. Unfortunately, the very poorest are always the first to feel the pinch of bad times, and when sickness is superadded to destitution, their helpless plight is terrible.

Our Medical Mission ministers to the souls as well as the bodies of the sick and dying poor through a Christian Doctor and a Staff of Trained Nurses and Nursing-Deaconesses.

The figures for the past year were—

SOUTHWARK HOME MEDICAL MISSION, 1900—1901.

Attendances for consultation, treatment, &c., at Medical Mission Services	7,015
Doctor's visits to those too sick to leave their homes	3,166
Nursing visits and surgical dressings to Sick Poor in their homes ...	9,590
Total number of ministrations throughout the year ...	19,771

This will be a very sad Christmas for many of our sick poor. Let us try to put a bright fire in their cold, dark grates, a warm blanket on their beds of pain, some little seasonable comforts on their bare tables—let us try to show the lonely widow, the disabled bread-winner, the dying Magdalen, that they are not forsaken, but the love of God pursues them to try and win their hearts to Himself; let "Glad tidings of great joy" fall on their sad and despairing hearts, touched and softened by "the kindness of God" through this ministry of mercy in the hour of their dire need.

All gifts (marked Southwark Home Medical Mission) will be distributed only to the sick and aged who have been under visitation, and whose real need is well known to our doctor and nurses, and with each gift there will be some ministry of grace to the soul as well as of relief to the body.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.Ed.

IT was a murky evening at the close of September, and the outlook was drab and dreary. A few splashy drops of rain fell occasionally, and the muddy streets were most unpleasant for pedestrians. Truly, an uninviting night in which to be abroad!

I had been attending the board meeting of a society in which I was interested, and I was absorbed in thinking over some points of the business transacted. I hardly noticed, therefore, that as I left Moorgate Street Station a timid little voice began to assail my ears. "Matches, sir," it said in a curious persistent whine. I walked steadily on, but the voice followed, challenging my attention. The speaker must have been a diminutive little match-seller, for the sound was near the ground. Again he repeated earnestly: "Two a ha'penny! Two boxes a ha'penny! Buy 'em, sir!" Then after a pause, he resumed: "Could give yer three, but there ain't much profit!"

That curious chant with its quaint comment at length checked my progress. My thoughts were effectually broken into. I stopped, and at a glance took in the scene and the speaker at once. I saw a sight, common enough, alas, in London: a little street-vendor, shoeless and stockingless, his bare feet well mudded, his trousers ragged, his jacket torn. Trousers and jacket were all he had to cover him from the drizzling rain and the shivering fog. A queer little old patched cap was perched on one side of his head in a knowing fashion, pathetically at variance with the sad lines of his face. The child looked to me about eight years of age; but I guessed him to be nine, for he was of stunted growth.

"Sold much to-day?" I inquired. He shook his head.

"Six boxes ain't much—only t'ree a'pence for the lot."

"Who sent you out?"

"Mother."

"And why does mother send out a little chap like you?"

"She can't help it: she's werry bad."

"Where is she?"

"Home."

"Anybody else there?"

"Sissy."

"How old is she?"

"Oh! she don't count! She's littler than me—lots littler!"

"Do you make much money?"

"Sometimes, if I'm lucky."

"Are you often lucky?"

"Not 'xactly often; I wor in real luck yesterday."

"How's that?"

"Such a nice gemman kem along, and says he, 'You are a pore little chap'; and he gev me a bob. Oh! he wor a nice gemman, he wor!"

My young companion had wasted no words, and now, when such emphasis was laid upon this particular gentleman, I felt he was being held up for imitation!

"Why don't you go home with your three ha'pence?" I continued.

"'Tain't no use," said the boy. "'Tain't no use going home with littler nor a tanner, sir!"

"Must you always have 'a tanner'?"

The little head was nodded quickly and emphatically. Clearly sixpence was the irreducible minimum!

"Well, now," I said, "tell me where your mother lives."

"13, Plough Court, Banner Street, St. Luke's," was the prompt answer.

I knew Banner Street; the place was not more than ten minutes' walk away. "Come on with me," I said, "and I will see your mother. I am a doctor, you know, and, perhaps, I can do her some good."

Without more ado the little chap gave himself up to the new idea, and trotted off by my side, his tongue wagging briskly the while. Here was an adventure, or at least, an event! He managed to keep up a never-failing stream of small talk which, I could not help observing, always came round, often by very sharp angles, to the "nice gemman"!

We soon reached Banner Street. A few minutes then brought us to the corner of a dingy, pestilential-looking court, lined on each side by tumble-down two-storey houses—houses that looked as if they had been originally jerry-built, and had been out of repair for many years back. They were noisome in the extreme, fœtid, reeking of slime and neglect. No. 13 presented a set of creaky and very filthy stairs. My guide hooked his small hand firmly into mine, and without delay we began to climb up and up and up, until at last we reached a back room on the top floor. The boy ran in first, while I waited outside. Only a minute elapsed, when the door was opened, and in response to a muffled "Come in, sir," I entered.

The room was literally devoid of furniture. There was no chair to sit down on; no table to fill up the bare floor space. Yet there was a marvellous air of peace and even of comfort in that empty garret! All, for instance was wondrously clean. And one felt that there was a decent and gracious air about the place that spoke well for its human occupants.

It was some time before my eyes could take in my surroundings. But presently I saw a figure lying near the window on the floor, on a heap of rags. It was that of a poor, decent-looking woman. A few words of sympathy and explanation, and I learned her simple story. The woman was a widow of about forty-five. She had injured her leg, and the wound, instead of healing, had apparently festered. A large unwholesome ulcer was exposed to view as I examined it. She had gone twice as an out-patient to the nearest hospital, but she could walk no longer. Her work as a charwoman had had perforce to be given up; so there she lay, helpless to move hand or foot on her own behalf! By her side stood a little girl of about six years of age—"our Bess," she called her—a bright-eyed, winsome little lassie.

A RAGGED BREAD-WINNER!

But Billy was the bread-winner! He it was who kept the wolf from the door. It was he who had boldly gone into trade in the endeavour to supply mother, sister, and himself with bread. Deeply affected, I listened to the simple, homely, heroic story. Men are inclined to the belief that heroes are only made on special occasions. Yet in truth the finest heroes are home-spun, and are often hidden in obscurity. Billy was of the true stuff, and his modest struggle might have made an epic!

Why, I asked of the woman, did she not go into a hospital? The question was hardly asked when I felt rebuked. "What would become of the children?" said the poor woman. "Billy might do for a bit by himself—he is a brave lad! But our Bess——." And then the poor soul fairly broke down. Yet in a minute the tears were wiped away, and as I looked at the calm, resolute face, I discovered where Bill got his bravery from.

"Well, then," said I, "why not try to get the children into some home or refuge, while you are taken to the hospital and properly treated?"

"Ah, yes, sir!" replied she eagerly, "that's what I would like; but then I don't know how to set about it."

Then, to my surprise, she added, in the simplest, most matter-of-fact tone imaginable, "I have been prayin' to the Lord all the time I have been here to take care of the children, and to keep our Bess from the streets." Here, in this wretched room, deprived of everything, depending absolutely upon a child of nine years of age for food and fuel—here lay this decent industrious creature with a firm trust in the God of prayer, and in her breast there still burned the flame of faith and hope.

Yes, indeed, God has his own in every nook of the great city! Poor Mrs. Rider was a Christian woman, strong in prayer and drawing in simple trust upon all the powers of the Omnipotent. "Look here, sir," continued the woman. She put her hand under the pillow and pulled out the leaf of a well-known religious weekly journal. "Look here, sir, read that!" And under my very eyes she placed a short narrative of one of my own rescues, which had been reprinted in its columns! How the page had drifted to her I know not; but the last lines of the story contained that statement of mine which has been so oft repeated, and which all my readers know so well: "Never during all these years have I refused a single destitute child who has made application at our doors." "There, sir," said the poor creature, not knowing in the least to whom she spoke, "I have been hopin' and prayin' that God would let Billy and our Bess get in there. I know they'd be safe, and they'd both be together, and then I'd go in cheerful to the 'Ospital."

I thought for a few minutes before I answered. At length I said slowly, "I did not tell you who I am; but now I must let you know." The poor woman looked up with something like alarm written on her face. I continued, "My name is Barnardo, and I have a great many poor boys and girls in my keeping. And really that is why I asked your little lad to bring me here to-day. Now, if I can help you by keeping the children for a while, I will."

PRAYER ANSWERED.

It is impossible to describe the emotions of wonder and amazement which passed over that poor suffering mother's face! The tears poured down her cheeks. "Billy!" she called, and the boy ran quickly to his mother's side. "Bess, dear," she added; and then, holding the two children in her trembling hands, she said, "This is the gentleman that has all the little boys and girls. I told yer God would hear me, and now He's just sent him here to take and keep you both until I am well again."

As for me, I felt at once humbled, encouraged and thankful; humbled to think that in any hour of darkness and difficulty I had ever doubted that God heard and answered prayer; encouraged by this fresh proof of our Father's guiding hand; and thankful for the opportunity thus afforded me of stretching out a helping hand to one of our Lord's own children.

There and then I entered fully into the mother's story, and made notes of the various names and addresses with which she supplied me, so that we could verify the facts and assure ourselves that there was genuine need and friendlessness in the case. I left with a promise that, if all proved right, I would admit the children to the Homes for a time while the mother entered the hospital. Of course, I saw to the immediate needs of the family, but not until I made Billy tell me once again the story of the "nice gemman."

"Now, Billy, what shall I do to be like the nice gentleman? Shall I give you a shilling now, or shall I take you both into my Home, and send your mother to the hospital?"

Billy hesitated; but there was no feeling of doubt in Bessie's mind. The words were hardly out when she sidled over to me and placed her little hand trustingly in mine. Billy said more slowly, "If mother wor well, I think it would be nicer to have the shillin'; but I'll go with you, sir, all right."

Ere long one of my good women helpers was in the room supplying the wants of the patient, bringing food and fuel and a few needed garments to the children, while I obtained an order giving admission to the hospital to this poor member of the Household of Faith.

And that was how Billy and Bess came to be counted among the greatest family in the world, 5,450 strong! But these two children are not solitary in their history. I have in the Homes to-day not a few who, although rescued from the deepest destitution, are the offspring of praying people. Surely there are none who have stronger claims than such waifs as these upon the sympathies of all the followers of Jesus Christ!

Thus our work goes on by day and night, rescuing from untold suffering and nameless degradation, not merely the offspring of parents who, because they are vicious and criminal, are their children's greatest enemies, but also many hapless bairns who are, it may be, of "the seed of the righteous." Such never apply to me in vain. I am now receiving, from the outcast and destitute classes and the homeless poor, more than nine children as the average for every working day in the year! Besides this, we are assisting in divers ways an immense number of others needing some help, though unsuitable for actual admission. During last year we FREELY admitted no fewer than 2,879 fresh cases to the Homes; while during the present year I have placed out in Canada alone the record total of over 1,000 boys and girls who have been trained in our English homes. To-day I have still 5,450 other waifs under my care, requiring daily food, training, education, and clothing, and for all these we are dependent, under God, upon the free-will offerings of his people everywhere!

Over 1,000 members of my great family are sick, ailing, helpless, afflicted, or incurable. These include the blind, the deaf and dumb, the deformed, the maimed, and mere infants under three years of age. In considering the applications made for admission only one point is insisted upon, the actual destitution of the applicant. If really destitute, admission is immediate, unqualified, unhampered. Our National Waifs Association has helped to close the prisons, the workhouses, and the reformatories. It has relieved local rates and national taxes. It has freely given ungrudging aid whenever the cry of a destitute child has reached it.

Moreover, the whole work has been strenuously carried on for thirty-five and a half years as a CHRISTIAN HOME MISSIONARY enterprise, carrying education and civilization, it is true, but first and chiefly and always bearing the gracious message of the Gospel and its beneficent influences to thousands of little lives begun in the thick gloom of heathendom, and appealing with pitiful insistence for aid at our very doors—it is this aspect of the work that I would present to the consciences and the hearts of Christ's servants everywhere. Therefore it is that I desire all to whom this brief narrative may come, ever to bear in mind that on the forefront of this national and benevolent enterprise is indelibly written the prime object of the Incorporated Association, namely, to advance by all and every lawful means the kingdom of Christ among the children of the slums! To co-operate in this urgently necessary and blessed work, I earnestly and humbly invite the prayers and loving sympathy of all who call themselves Christians.

The Suppression of Immorality.

THE persevering efforts put forth in South London by Mr. J. O. Bairstow, agent of the local Free Church Council for the suppression of immorality, continue to be attended by remarkable success.

The annual report, which has been issued recently, shows that of ninety-five persons charged with managing or assisting to manage iniquitous resorts no fewer than eighty-three were convicted, some being fined and others sentenced to terms of imprisonment with hard labour. In one case, the proprietor of a registered lodging-house, who was a large owner of property, was fined £20, in addition to costs. This prosecution has created a sensation in the district. The closure of many brothels and the increased vigilance of the police in consequence of the action of the Council have caused a remarkable improvement in the condition of the neighbourhood. Rev. F. B. Meyer is the treasurer and superintendent of the work.

Tipperary Soldiers' Home.

THOSE who have so kindly helped us to start the Soldiers' Home in Tipperary will be glad to learn that the building is at last in progress. We were in Tipperary the end of last month and found the work progressing well, and by May, 1902, the building should be finished. At first we had hoped to find some house there which could be adapted to a soldiers' home, but we searched in vain, and at last saw it would be an absolute necessity to build, so a site was obtained, which is most suitable—quite close to the barracks. Building is very expensive, specially in war times, when prices go up, and so we shall need fully double the amount we at first anticipated. Then we thought £800 would be sufficient, now we find we shall need about £1,600. Towards this sum (including a loan of £500 on interest) we have nearly £1,000.

Soldiers' Homes have proved havens of refuge; and our hearts are full of thanksgiving to God as we think that, at last, our soldiers will have in Tipperary a shelter and safe place for relaxtion from the monotony of barrack life, and the haunts of sin, which abound in all our garrison towns. We thank all who have helped us, and feel confident that the sum needed to complete the building will in due course be supplied. One gentleman has promised £50 if the full amount is subscribed by the month of May next.

Miss Mason's Houses of Rest.

THE Houses of Rest at St. John's Wood and Eastbourne do not, perhaps, appeal so forcibly to the imagination as do some other branches of Christian work, one reason being that the recipients of their benefits are Christian missionaries and mission workers, who, like their Master, do not "cry or make their voice heard in the street," except in the proclamation of the message of salvation.

Nevertheless, the Houses of Rest could tell many a pathetic story of weariness and hardship bravely borne for the Lord's sake. In many a case it seemed as if the burden could be endured no longer, when, lo! some kind friend suggested a visit to the House of Rest, with the result that the weariness and depression have speedily been replaced by a quickening of vital powers, new hopes spring up in the heart, and the worker has become reinvigorated for labour in the Master's vineyard.

A brief extract from a letter will illustrate this: "I cannot tell what the visit to the Eastbourne House of Rest has been to me, in more ways than one. I had been obliged to lay aside temperance work, mothers' meetings, sick-visiting, and all my other work; and I went to Eastbourne feeling that I should never be able to resume them. But I have come back to make a new start, and believe that I may still be permitted to serve as heretofore."

Besides the Houses of Rest there is the AGED WORKERS' HOME, with its well-furnished bed-sitting-room rent free, coal and other firing included, where aged Christian workers, no longer able for active service, can spend their remaining days in peace and comfort.

And in addition to these, a "HELP TO WORKERS FUND" exists, for the purpose of providing a little pecuniary help to workers in the various mission fields when times of stress and trial overtake them.

For thirty-six years this work has been carried on, and the numerous answers to prayer, and deliverances in times of need proving the truth of God's Word, would fill a large volume. Hundreds of visitors to the Homes bear testimony to the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord they have enjoyed.

Over 900 visitors pass through the Homes annually, which, in addition to keeping up the two large houses, entails heavy expenditure.

The winter makes heavy calls upon every department. Communications should be addressed to Miss Mason, House of Rest, 10, Finchley Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Barnwell Theatre.

THE Evangelistic Mission carried on at the Barnwell Theatre, Cambridge, continues to hold its own. The Gospel is proclaimed, with clearness and earnestness, to large congregations, and deep spiritual impressions have been made.

Speaking at the thirty-second anniversary celebration on November 21, Mr. W. K. VAWSER, Hon. Superintendent, gave a graphic account of the past year's work. Important improvements have been made in the building; the accommodation has been increased, and heating apparatus added, and on this account a deficit of £34 remains. Owing chiefly to the introduction of lantern services, the attendance has largely increased. Fifteen gatherings of the kind were held, with a total attendance of 11,800.

Stirring addresses followed from a number of well-known supporters of the Mission. Rev. A. HINDLE gave a refreshing message to workers on the words, "Together with Christ." Rev. A. HART spoke vigorously on the necessity for preaching the Gospel plainly and directly. "Away with incense for the purpose of glorifying a church, and let people get at the heart of the Gospel."

The gathering, which was of a hearty character throughout, concluded with a telling address from Rev. W. R. MOWLL, who referred to the infidelity prevalent among the masses and the call for greater devotion on the part of God's people.

Cardiff Fellowship Meetings.

THESE monthly meetings were inaugurated last year, for the purpose of bringing together all Christian workers of Cardiff for quiet waiting upon God, testimonies respecting his work, earnest petition for the outpouring of the Spirit, and loving fellowship one with the other.

The fifteenth meeting was held last Saturday at the Police Institute. There was an unusually large attendance, and an earnest spirit of supplication prevailed. After a considerable time had been spent in prayer, praise, the reading of Scripture, with a brief comment by Mr. Rowland Smith, an impressive address was delivered by Mr. Davey, a missionary from China. He took for his subject "The Worker's Secret of Power," and drew striking lessons from references to our Saviour's habit of prayer. He pleaded earnestly for more time to be given to private prayer and the prayer meeting. In the course of the evening, Miss Moore (Pentecostal League) spoke a few telling words on prayer and the spiritual life.

The next meeting will be held on January 4, when Rev. R. J. Rees, M.A., will deliver an address on "The Sunday-school Teacher and his Text Book." A good programme was given out for the New Year. Several ministers of the town will speak at the forthcoming meetings, and it was announced that Mr. J. Glenelg Grant (hon. superintendent of the John Cory Sailors' Rest) would at an early date speak on "The Christian Worker's True Attitude towards the Drink Traffic and the Drinking Habit;" and that later on, Mr. T. M. Wintle (Pontymoyle) would deal with the subject of "After-Meetings, Throwing out the Net, and How to deal with Inquirers."

Special prayer was asked for on behalf of the Cardiff Town Mission: that God would open the way for extending its operations by the employment of more missionaries. There are at present only two—Mr. Carss, who has rendered about fourteen years' faithful service; and Miss Jeffries, recently appointed. These are the only town missionaries in Cardiff, with its teeming masses of those who never come under the direct influence of Gospel ministry, either at church or mission hall.

The Blindness of Them That Believe Not. —Would you think it a pleasant life, though you had fine clothes and good diet, never to see the sun, but still to be kept in a dungeon with them? Thus are they that live in worldly honour and plenty, but still without God. They are in continual darkness with all their enjoyments.—Archbishop Leighton.

A Note of Encouragement.

THE NATIONAL REFUGES.

IT may confidently be said that at no period of the fifty-eight years' work of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children has the Society been in a more vigorous and satisfactory condition than at the present time. This fact must be a source of joy to the Christian public who are familiar with the heartrending tales of woe so frequently met with in the great Metropolis and throughout the provinces. It is a source of joy to wealthy Christians who are "stewards of Christ," to know that these time-honoured Refuges continue to receive homeless children, and thoroughly equip them for the battle of life. Hence it is that financial help continues to be forthcoming for the carrying on of what is known to be solid work.

Throughout the country there are benevolent people who not only give freely of their substance for the benefit of poor children, but who take a personal interest in the future career of their protégés. These are they who can vouch for the genuineness of the technical training and religious teaching of the 900 boys and girls constantly under the Society's care. The records of the work are also genuine, no "faking" of facts or figures being resorted to. The lads, dressed in sailor costume, are actually young sea-lions belonging to the Arethusa and Chichester Training Ships. These vessels are moored off Greenhithe, Kent, and have done, and are still doing, a noble and patriotic work in training poor boys of good character for the Royal Navy and Merchant Service.

Many readers of The Christian will remember seeing in the public Press a few months ago a letter which appeared in all the principal and local newspapers throughout the United Kingdom, announcing vacancies on board the Arethusa. This letter was issued by Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, the secretary, because so many boys had been drafted into the Royal Navy, &c., and it was desired to fill the vacancies immediately, and raise the number of boys on board to the full complement of 200. Applications at once poured in from all parts of the kingdom, and in many instances the responses were from poor boys themselves.

ONE WROTE AS FOLLOWS:—

Father left home when I was little, through mother. Mother is not dead, but has nothing to do with me. She has not been good to me, and never cared what became of me.

The poor boy did not appeal in vain. "When my father and mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up." And the Lord is continually doing so, through the instrumentality of the National Refuges and kindred institutions.

In this merciful work the committee fully recognise the absolute necessity of promptness. They, therefore, totally discard the procrastinating "voting" system, and deal with every case at once on its own merits. Herein is the secret of much of the Society's popularity, as is testified continually by clergymen, ministers, district visitors, and other practical workers in the field of philanthropy. Over 16,000 destitute boys and girls have thus benefited, and it is well worth going to any of the Society's eight Homes on shore, or to the ships at Greenhithe, to see how happy and comfortable the young people are whose lot has fallen into the "pleasant places" of the National Refuges. Whether one visits the Farm School and Shaftesbury School at bracing Bisley, in Surrey; the well-appointed Boys' Home at Fortescue House, Twickenham, the London Technical Home, or the Working Boys' Home, in Shaftesbury Avenue; the Arethusa Depôt in East India Dock Road; the Girls' Home at Ealing House, St. Mary's Road, Ealing—there will be found the same undeniable evidence of solid work. The principle of "thoroughness," so forcibly inculcated by the great Earl of Shaftesbury, has happily been zealously maintained by the managers of these Refuges and Ships, with which the noble philanthropist was for many years closely associated. Here is a pleasing instance of successful work:—

On September 8, 1901, J.R., who was once a poor boy on the Chichester, but who is now captain of a merchant ship, wrote to Mr. H. Bristow Wallen as follows:

Dear Sir,—Just a few lines to say I arrived in London on Friday, after my fifteen months' spell away. This is a fairly long voyage for our steamer, but as we have visited both sides of America, as well as the return trips to China and Japan, one need not be surprised. Having paid the crew off on Saturday, I was enabled to get from the ship till Tuesday—not a very long holiday after our spell away; but as we leave London on Thursday for Rotterdam, I must be to the front all the time. Herewith I enclose £5, which I will ask you to place to the account of general purposes. This is simply a donation, but I hope you will hear from me every now and again to the same effect.

Readers of The Christian who would like to emulate the generous action of this old Chichester boy are cordially invited to communicate with us on behalf of this good work, which entirely depends on such voluntary help. The office of the Refuge is at 164, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.

Their Christmas and Yours.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

FIRST of all, let me define the terms. When I say "their Christmas," I mean the Christmas enjoyed (?) by our clients; and when I say "yours," I mean the Christmas enjoyed (without the query) by our supporters.

Our clients are a miserable, sin-stained, poverty-stricken, unhappy multitude. Generally speaking, they are reaping that which they have sown; but sometimes, indeed frequently, they are reaping what others have sown for them. Innocent children suffer because of the sins of their fathers; and wives, whose greatest mistake has been that of marrying their husbands, live a life of unending regret that they ever married as they did.

Our supporters are those who have learned that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," and who see in the fearful need of the very poor, and of the terribly wretched, an all-sufficient reason why they should deny themselves, and minister to the urgent needs and pressing necessities of those whose lives are an unending combat with hunger and misery.

It is stated on good authority that over thirty per cent. of the population of London is living below the poverty line. It is among such that we have laboured for forty-two years, and it is on behalf of such that I want to enlist your sympathies.

A few days ago I received a letter from a woman living near the Goswell Road. Such letters are very familiar reading to me by now, and I have long been accustomed to their oft-repeated pitiable story; but I must confess that I was more than usually impressed as I read:—

My husband is in prison, and I am in great trouble, and I need your kind assistance . . . and sorry to say I have one child laying dead . . . and just getting out of my confinement of another one puts me in great distress; and if you could possibly help me, I should be extremely obliged.

I instantly pictured the whole scene mentally. The absence of the husband—the presence of death. The weakness of the wife—the strength of her grief. The smallness of her resources—the greatness of her need.

It was toward evening when we visited her, and a glance showed that the mental picture was a correct one. The house was one of a row of six or seven, surrounded by towering warehouses, which seemed to emphasize the smallness and squalor of these homes of the poor.

The woman lived at the top of the house, and her weekly rent was three shillings and sixpence. The furniture was good for firewood, but for very little else. The small coffin placed against the head of the woman's bed, the empty cupboard, the almost fireless grate, all pleaded eloquently for that help which we, on your behalf, were not slow in administering.

The funeral of the little one had been arranged for by her neighbours, who, out of their poverty, had contributed enough to prevent "a pauper's burial." As a matter of fact, to a far greater extent than is generally supposed.

The case I have mentioned is in some respects unusual, but day by day we are dealing with, and helping, people whose circumstances are more or less similar. Ours is an all-round, many-sided mission work, and funds to enable us to meet our liabilities are greatly needed before the end of the year.

I feel I need not explain in detail to my present readers all our operations. They are well known to them, and they have for many years proved their sympathy with our efforts in a most practical and liberal manner. This support I value highly, and I am sure I shall not solicit its continuance in vain.

Victims of a Great Fraud.

THE LIBERATOR RELIEF FUND.

By Rev. Stockwell Watts.

"Bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure."

SUCH is the Divine promise. Not luxuries, but necessaries are thereby guaranteed to the children of God on the best security.

Very wonderfully has this promise been fulfilled in the case of the aged "Liberator" victims, so cruelly robbed of their life-savings, just as they were hoping to enjoy the fruit of their industry and thrift.

But how is the promise fulfilled? In numerous instances simply through the practical sympathy of loving Christian hearts, who delight in being the honoured instruments of our heavenly Father in caring for his confiding children.

We rejoice to know that, of the more than 3,000 cases on our books, many hundreds have passed to their eternal rest, gratefully witnessing to the goodness and tenderness of God in the midst of their terrible trial. One of them who recently died of malignant cancer, wrote thus a few months before her decease:—

With feelings of deep gratitude I received your kind letter yesterday, and felt it was another instance of a heavenly Father's watchful care in providing for my wants; as your nice New Year's card expressed—

This I know, God watches all my path,
And I can trust.

How deeply indebted am I, and hundreds of others to your unceasing efforts on our behalf, and I trust those appeals lately recorded in the papers will meet with great success, and that you will be everlastingly blessed for all your labours.

We also rejoice that not a single eligible applicant to the Fund has been turned away unassisted, and that the 600 survivors, who are seventy years of age and upwards, have been made annuitants, and will enjoy permanent relief.

But this has absorbed the whole of the money thus far received, and we must remind our friends that our work is not nearly completed yet. We have 350 others upon our books between sixty and seventy years of age—all more or less destitute and afflicted—and many of these in the matter of strength, or rather feebleness, are far older than some who have turned seventy. Further, we have more than 100 who are under sixty years of age, but unable to work because they are confirmed invalids, nine-tenths of them being widows or spinsters. To all of these we must continue the grants for several years to come. It would be a cruel disappointment if we could not—almost a repetition of the calamity that fell upon them at the time of the great crash in September, 1892. But that means that we need annual subscriptions amounting at least to £2,000.

Then there are the new cases still coming to us, many of them quite as distressing as any that have been previously dealt with; and, if possible, with a stronger claim upon our charity, for all these years they have struggled on against their difficulties, and are only driven to apply to us by starvation staring them in the face.

The widow of a postman (aged fifty-two.

Church of England), who lost all her savings in the "Liberator," writes:—

My eldest girl, who is my chief support, has been in Guy's Hospital a month last Saturday, and previous to her admission I had her three months attending the dispensary. She has been operated on for cancer, and is now ordered away for another month to a seaside hospital. I have to supply her with a number of things which I have not got, and have no means of getting, as I have parted with all that was of any value, and, not having any relatives, have no one to look to for help.

An ex-station-master on the London and South-Western Railway (age sixty-five, Church of England)—loss £809—discharged at sixty-five with a gratuity of £50. Will the kind-hearted among the shareholders please note this? He writes September, 1901:—

The money was the result of the hard labour and self-denial of thirty-two years, gained honestly and fairly, and it does seem hard now to have to depend upon charity. If I had been a rogue I should not have held a position of trust on the London and South-Western Railway for forty-seven years.

HEALTH BROKEN DOWN.

A mole catcher (age sixty-five, Church of England). His vicar writes:—

Up to about twelve years ago applicant farmed a small farm, when he retired, selling his farm, and investing the proceeds in the "Liberator." He lived on the interest until the smash came, since which time he has had to maintain himself and family by labouring. The man feels his position most keenly. Being reduced from a comfortable farmer to a labourer has told upon him, and his advancing age makes it difficult for him to do much work, added to which his health has now broken down, and consequently it is only occasionally that he is able to work at all. He has no friends or relatives able to assist him.

The widow of a sawyer (age seventy, Baptist), whose married daughter also placed all her savings in the same society, and when the smash came lost her reason, her child being left on the hands of the grandfather. He toiled on as long as he was able, contriving to provide a scanty livelihood, till a few months since he was stricken with paralysis, and after several weeks of great suffering passed away, leaving his widow and grandchild totally unprovided for. Their minister writes:—

"Will you be good enough to do all you can for them and at once. The woman is frail and unable to work. 'A friend in need is a friend indeed,' and any help in their terribly straitened circumstances would be most opportune and most thankfully received."

An aged labourer (in his eightieth year, Wesleyan). His minister writes:—

He is now seventy-nine years of age, still struggling to do a little work in fine weather, and has an aged sister partly dependent upon him. The good man who has employed him, more out of charity than anything else, is now dead, and the poor old man must soon be unable to do any work at all, and be left entirely destitute. If anything can be done for him it will indeed be very welcome.

A SCOTCH CASE.

An aged mason (Presbyterian). The following simple note in a very shaky handwriting comes a long way and tells its own unvarnished story. From a weekly wage that rarely exceeded 20s., these worthy folk with wondrous thrift had saved sufficient for their old age:—

I am seventy-two and my wife seventy-three years. We have been advised to apply for some help from the Fund which was raised to help the sufferers.

Their ministerial reference adds—

They are most deserving, worthy people, now totally unfit for any description of work. The old man has really worked much longer than he was able, and now something should be done to assist him.

These are but typical of nearly a hundred new cases that have applied to us during the past twelve months, and who are looking for the fulfilment of the Divine promise in the practical sympathy of kind-hearted readers. "God loveth a cheerful giver."

Cheques and P.O.'s, if made payable to the "Liberator" Relief Fund, and crossed "The London City and Midland Bank," may be sent to the Secretary, Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Prevention and Cure.

"FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN."

FOR the want of a prompt and helping hand at a crucial moment in their lives, it is impossible even to guess how many thousands of young women in jeopardy and moral peril have been borne down to temporal and eternal ruin.

Oh! it was pitiful, near a whole cityful—
Home she had none.

Their very helplessness constitutes one of the most touching and urgent appeals for help which it is possible to make to the Christian public.

Many, alas! have become the victims of the selfish cruelty and deception of the flatterer; and when, in their repentance, they seek to return again to the pursuit of a purer life, they call forth, by reason of their penitence and helplessness, our deepest compassion and anxiety for their rescue.

The Homes and Open-all-Night Refuge have, for forty-five years, been seeking to throw the mantle of protection around virtuous, friendless young girls in circumstances of need, as well as to rescue the betrayed and penitent outcast.

THE JUBILEE TRAINING HOME is arranged to receive fifty girls rescued from imminent moral peril, or found in midst of vice and impurity; while upwards of one hundred young women are taken into the rescue homes.

THE OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE—"the ever-open door"—carries on its merciful work during the hours of darkness, and often amidst the keen inclemency and storm of night, when respectable citizens are resting in comfort and security in their own peaceful homes.

It seems strange, when the fact is considered, that the Christ-like, merciful work of rescuing the perishing, such as is carried on in these Homes, should stand in need of adequate support, and yet such is unhappily only too true. Doubtless it is not that the sympathizers with the friendless or the fallen in our cities are few; yet unhappily it becomes growingly difficult, in this busy age, to devote time to reflect upon the needs that are around us, especially for a work which, from its character, cannot be publicly paraded.

Only when some instance comes to our immediate notice do we rouse up to the consciousness that there are thousands of others being hurled down to destruction by the passion and deceit of the dissolute.

"HUMANITY'S NEED IS HUMANITY'S CLAIM."

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN have ever been generous in helping these Homes and the Night Refuge. In every department there has been an increase in the number assisted during the past year. It is only financially that there has been a falling off. Will the readers kindly consider this fact, and come to our aid? The applications for admission made in one day recently are submitted as a potent appeal for help to enable the account to close on the 31st inst. without the burden and anxiety of debt.

(1) A female missionary brought a respectable girl, aged sixteen. Her mother died five years before, and, through an accident, her father is unable to discharge his full duties as a labourer, and his wages are small in consequence. He has other children to support, but is willing to assist as far as possible with this one also. She was admitted.

(2) A lady in the provinces sought admission for a girl of fourteen, who has lost her father, and whose mother is very anxious about her. Fuller particulars are to be sent, and help was promised.

(3) A worker connected with the West London Mission asked for the admission of a girl, at present in a hospital in consequence of the impure life she has led. She is to be admitted on her discharge.

(4) The secretary of a mission asked for the admission of a girl, unfallen, but who appears to be in the greatest possible danger. Her father drinks, and her mother (living apart from her husband) is known to have been living a bad life for years. Admission arranged for.

(5) A Church of England Temperance Society missionary applied on behalf of a ladylike young woman, who has been a book-keeper, and until recently had borne a good character. She has since "got into disgrace," but is now in a penitent frame of mind, and wishes to be helped. Assistance promised as soon as she can come.

(6) The superintendent of a Boys' Refuge sent a woman who he had hoped would be willing to accept the help of the Homes, but she was not in a frame of mind to do so. She promised to return again, and will be assisted when she renews her application.

MISSION TO DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

THE mental picture most persons possess of the fishermen's life, formed under rosy circumstances during a pleasant holiday visit to some fishing village, is generally romantic, but while recognising an element of danger, they are distinctly impressed that it is a free, pleasant, and desirable existence. The fisherman's life of which they get a glimpse is that of the man who sets off from the shore at sunrise and returns again to his wife and children as the sun sinks low upon the horizon.

The longshore fishermen have, no doubt, to face hardships and dangers; but their lot is easy as compared with the deep-sea fishermen, who toil at sea, not for a few hours at a time, but week after week, patiently taking the rough with the smooth. There is no friendly port at hand to enter when the barometer gives warning that a storm is brewing, and they must of necessity fight out their battle with the elements alone, for from the time they lose sight of land after leaving the harbour, they rarely see it again till the voyage is closed weeks afterwards.

But the custom these toilers of the deep have of working in fleets has made it possible to minister to their spiritual and physical needs, and the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen has a small fleet of vessels specially built and equipped for ministering to these hardy workers. These vessels each possess a small hospital, and receive sick and wounded patients on board for treatment by the mission doctors. They are also centres from which sound, healthy literature is distributed, and help given in a score of ways; while on Sunday, weather permitting, simple services are held—prayer, hymns, a portion of Scripture, and a simple address, which are much appreciated by the God-fearing fishermen.

BY WORD AND DEED.

Each of the Society's vessels has on its port bow "Preach the Word," and on its starboard bow, "Heal the sick"; and it is the earnest desire of those who have their charge to carry out the Master's two-fold command. The result of the sowing of the Word can be discerned by those whose knowledge of the men takes them back far enough; but all will not be fully known till that great day, when all things shall be revealed.

Prayer is asked that the first year of the century may not close with a deficit in the funds, but that rather sufficient help may be given to clear off all present liabilities, and also to complete the new hospital trawler now building, the Queen Alexandra.

Under the title of "Echoes from the Deep," the Mission is just issuing a most attractive publication for circulation amongst those but newly interested in the work, as well as others who may even yet be quite unacquainted with its scope and beneficent agencies. The booklet consists mainly of letters received from fishermen themselves, testifying to the great blessing the Society has proved to them, and there are many pretty pictures in the way of illustration.

The new bound volume—the sixteenth—of "Toilers of the Deep," which embraces the monthly issues for 1901, is now ready, and may be obtained direct from the office, or by order through any bookseller at home or abroad. It is decidedly a handsome looking volume in its special binding, and makes an admirable drawing-room book. The cost is 3s. 6d. Friends of the Mission might do invaluable service by seeing that their district libraries are supplied with copies; for in all public libraries the book should find a place.

The patron of the Mission is Her Majesty the Queen, and the secretary is Mr. Francis H. Wood, 181, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

The Oldest Society.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

THIS old and useful Society, established in 1685, holds on its way with increasing vigour, and is expanding its field of labour as the years roll on. The following statements from its last annual report will in some measure show its progress:—

"In the middle of this century the members engaged were but thirty-three, while at the present day they have increased, in round numbers, to 500, and the area of operations has multiplied to an equal extent. The fund shave advanced from something under £20 to over £4,000 a year."

This record of progress speaks for itself; it calls forth our sincere and grateful acknowledgments to Almighty God for his great mercy and gracious guidance in thus prospering the work of the Society. To Him be all the glory!

As far as the past year is concerned, the general character of the work has been continued, with every sign of blessing. We still find the people ready to hear and receive the simple Gospel message that is proclaimed in every place throughout the year. We find this to be the case in the open air, in lodging-houses, where the lapsed masses congregate; in the workhouses and infirmaries, where the sick, the very aged, and dying are ministered to, as also in the mission-hall and rooms. In every case the devout attention given to the Word spoken, has been taken to prove that God was working by his Spirit, thus reaching the hearts and consciences of the people, leading them to realize their condition as sinners, and guiding them to the Saviour for mercy and peace. Cases of this kind have been continually met with, and have rejoiced the hearts of those who minister to them.

A HARD FIELD.

The Lodging House Visitation has been continued with great success. Amongst such large numbers many young men and women are found who have not reached that miserable state of callousness which makes their reformation hopeless. Men and women are often met with who only need an effort to make a new start in life. This, however, is almost impossible unless someone interposes to render assistance. This help is gladly rendered; and, although not always successful, the workers are cheered with cases which have resulted in success, and in true conversion from sin to God. Through the roaming character of many who come and go, such cases are hard to trace. Those who get on, are able to secure little homes of their own, move into localities of a more respectable character, and are thus lost sight of.

Open-air preaching is an effectual mode of reaching the tens of thousands who never attend church or chapel, but are constantly on the move, or hanging about all over London on the Sabbath Day or on the week evenings, and whose moral and spiritual condition is of the most deplorable character, as seen from the Christian standpoint. To meet this class, there are conducted regular services at about twenty stations, some in main thoroughfares, others in courts, back alleys, and side streets, where such work is urgently needed. Very few open-air workers, comparatively, penetrate these obscure places, which are filled with the very classes who most of all need the Gospel.

In such quarters we have often taken our stand, and found the people listening to the Word and appreciating our visits. In the more prominent stations, large and attentive audiences have been gathered with every sign of appreciation, for many have tendered thanks to the workers. Among them many inquirers have been met with, and not a few have professed conversion, signed the pledge, and in many other ways given evidence of having been benefited.

The poor have been well looked after, and relief has been given by various agencies at the several mission centres, as the following figures will show:—

1,228 homeless men were sheltered for the night and fed.

21,000 free meals were given.

10,500 children's dinners and breakfasts.

1,000 free lodgings provided for the homeless.

11,000 workhouse inmates were entertained in the winter.

2,610 attendances were made by poor husbandless women.

5,377 workhouse inmates and lodging-house people were taken into the country for a day.

500 children sent to the Home for a week's rest and change.

Besides this, a large amount of relief distributed in many other ways, including clothing, and thus was the Master's behest to feed the hungry and clothe the naked carried out. About 500 workers, including ladies, gave their voluntary service in the carrying out of this work.

The headquarters of the Community are at the Hall, London Street, Bethnal Green, E.

10,000 Consecutive Nights!

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.

"THE Gospel first" is the watchword of Mr. F. N. Charrington and his devoted band of workers at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End; and the vast audiences that come together to listen to the earnest missioners are a standing proof that the Gospel, so far from losing its hold, has a perennial attraction for the masses.

The great hall, which accommodates some 5,000 persons, is filled to overflowing every Sunday, while the week-night audiences are also very large. The Saturday evening gathering, for example, is regularly attended by about 1,000 people. There is no sensational attraction; the meeting is one simply for prayer and testimony. It will readily be concluded, and rightly so, from these simple facts, that the Assembly Hall is

A NOTABLE CENTRE OF REVIVAL.

Indeed, few meetings pass without penitents being pointed to Christ. On Sunday evenings, in particular, some glorious scenes are witnessed as men and women throng to the inquiry-rooms. In this way a great number of all classes of people, chiefly the poor, have been brought into the Kingdom; and many of them have become, in their turn, ardent workers in the mission. It is interesting to note that Gospel meetings have been carried on for nearly ten thousand consecutive nights.

A feature of the work which invariably arouses the deep sympathy of visitors is the children's department. In a separate building, near the Assembly Hall, over a thousand little ones regularly gather to what is certainly one of the largest Sunday-schools in London, and where the children of the poorest receive sound Scriptural instruction. There are nightly gatherings for children, as for adults.

FOR THE STARVING POOR.

Terrible are the scenes witnessed by the large staff of voluntary workers who go forth into the darkest plague spots of the East to win souls for the Master. Amid the "one-roomed houses," where the poorest herd in squalor, and where men and women and children have to labour from morn till night to earn their scanty living, the sick and dying, the suffering and needy are the objects of tender care. In the slums, too, overtaken by misfortune, are Christian people whose distress is relieved. A sample case is that of an old Christian man nearly eighty years of age. In one room, with him, lives his daughter and two children. The poor old fellow has a half-crown per week allowed him by a friend. His daughter goes out to work, and her average earnings are not more than six shillings per week, while the rent of the wretched room is 4s. 6d. "I paid him a visit," says one of the workers, "and found he was just going to have his dinner, which consisted of a plate of very thin watery-looking soup—nothing else, no bread. The room was scrupulously clean. He asked me to sit down. There was just room in front of the little bit of fire in the grate. In one corner of the room, on string fixed in a triangle, was the washing hung up to dry—work done by the daughter before going out for the day. It was a pitiable sight to see the once prosperous tradesman boxed up in this little room."

For some thousands of such poor creatures Christmas fare will be supplied during the coming season.

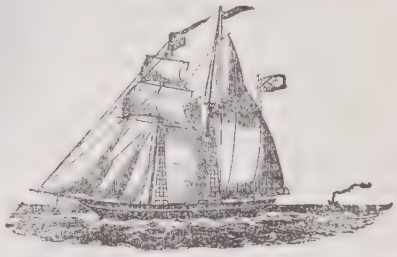
MANY-SIDED EFFORTS.

The undertakings for the religious and social good of the people, which have grown out of the Mission, are manifold. The summer holiday home for poor girls, the extensive temperance organizations, the large provident clubs, the coffee palace, and the efforts put forth for the dissemination of helpful literature; these and other undertakings (in all of which Mr. E. H. Kerwin's organizing ability is manifest), call for generous support. In this connection Mr. Charrington has to dispel an illusion. He writes: "Many people still seem to imagine that I am a rich man, and could support the work myself. At the risk of seeming to appear egotistical I must again explain that, although I have sufficient income to avoid the necessity of taking anything for my services, and so am able to give my whole time gratuitously, still beyond this what little I can give is of small service compared with the amount required to carry on such an extensive work. We require at least £1,000 to meet our liabilities up to Christmas, and trust that friends will give sufficient to tide us over the winter, which threatens to be a very trying and anxious one."

"Welcome Home" for Sailors.

THE operations so long and devotedly maintained by Miss Child for the benefit of sailors of all nationalities using the port of London, continue to make remarkable progress. The premises at Canning Town, conveniently situated near the great docks, and so well known as "The Welcome Home for Sailors," constitute a never-failing attraction to "Jack" on his arrival from a voyage.

It is a "far cry" indeed from the demoralizing conditions of the evil resorts into which sailors are entrapped, to this bright and beautiful institution. The "Welcome Home" is in every way a delightful resort, and the administration is marked by such wise and thoughtful care that its popularity affords ground for no surprise. Here are reading and dining rooms, as well as bedrooms, and each department is comfortable and home-like.



THE CHRISTMAS BOAT.

While making every provision for the physical and moral benefit of the sailors, Miss Child's chief aim, from first to last, is to win them for Christ; and in many ports, and on many seas, are sailors who have become valiant in the Christian warfare as a result of spiritual impressions received in the Gospel gatherings at Canning Town.

It will be readily understood that Miss Child's labours are manifold. In addition to the direction of her extensive institution, her work includes the safe keeping of money and clothes of men at sea, frequent correspondence with sailors and workers among them, and the organization of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew" for Gospel services. At Christmas time Miss Child has to bear increased responsibilities at home and abroad, and her efforts should command the liberal support of Christian people.

The unloading of the "Christmas Boat," laden with gifts for sailors of various nations, will take place on Saturday, December 21, at the Welcome Home, at 7 p.m., and Miss Child will be glad if her friends will send her "cargo" for the craft.

A Revered Worker.

MEMORIES OF GEORGE HOLLAND.

In presenting an engraving of the latest photograph of our beloved friend George Holland, we recall some memories of that noble worker in the home mission field. Long will his memory remain green in that crowded district of Whitechapel, which was the scene of his lifework. He was beloved of the poor, for whom he lived and worked in a singularly devoted or self-denying manner; he was valued by a wide circle of Christian friends, who were able to estimate his abundant labours at their proper value.

It would seem that George Holland was not only a veritable apostle of the East End, but that he was Lord Shaftesbury's ideal mission worker among the poor. In 1878, the Earl spoke of the work in George Yard as "a miracle of labour and God's goodness in that terrible district." Somewhat later, the worker is "that inestimable man;" and it is added by the great philanthropist whom Spurgeon characterized as being himself "the best man of his time," "I had rather be George Holland than ninety-nine hundredths of the great living and dead."

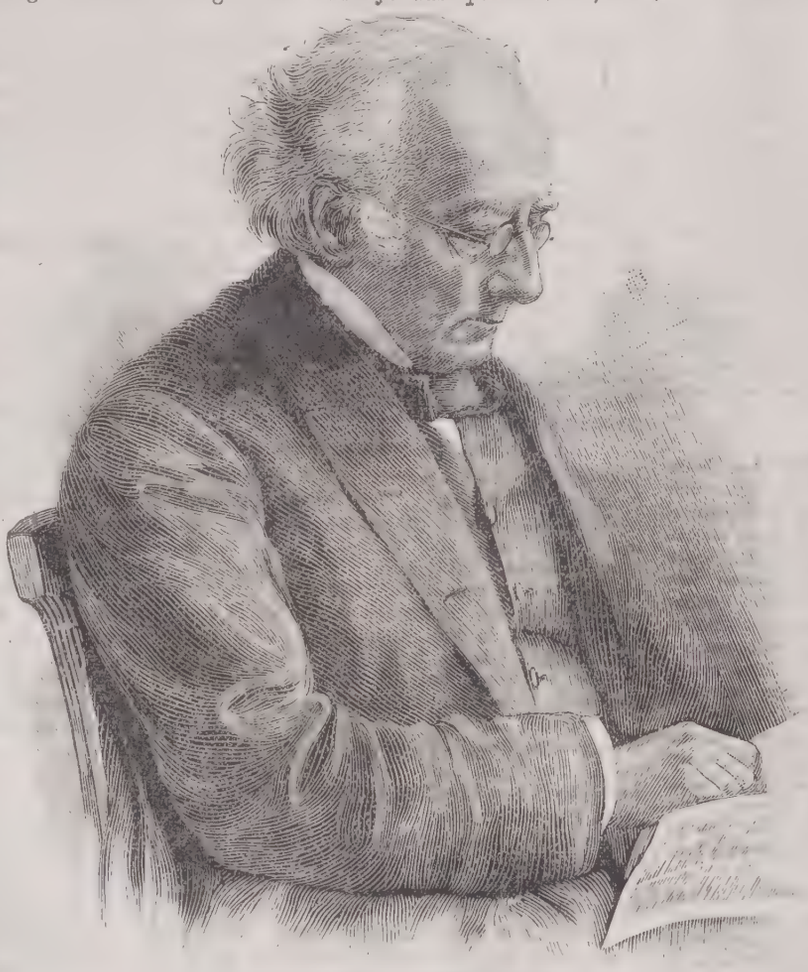
Not less deserving of remembrance is what the humble-minded worker himself said about the sainted nobleman when for a time they were separated by death. The Earl's last visit to George Yard was a sorrowful time, because he, as well as his friends, seemed to realize that they would never meet there again. "I don't think I shall ever see you in the flesh again in this place," he said, adding, "I am ill, and at my time of life I cannot expect to be long here." Then, tightening the cloth of his coat, he said, "Look, how I have fallen away." What he said further seemed to show that when life's last hours actually came he would like to have George Holland by his side. On being asked if he would attend if sent for, the latter at once replied that he would do so at any hour.

GEORGE YARD—PAST AND PRESENT.

In visiting the scene of George Holland's labours to-day, one who remembers the district as it was is struck with the transformation which has taken place. When Lord Shaftesbury spoke of the surroundings as "terrible" he did not at all exaggerate. In the days before railways Whitechapel had its coaching and carriers' inns, which, with their spacious yards, were convenient havens for travellers coming in from the country either by coach or waggon. In course of time the open spaces were built upon, and as the population increased a tendency was shown to degenerate into dangerous slums. George Yard especially became notorious, for even in the eighteenth century the place seems to have become associated with highwaymen who infested the roads in the suburbs of London. At length one-room life became general, while the common lodging-houses were dens of moral and physical contagion, and in more senses than one a public danger. The difference between the London of to-day and the city of a generation or two ago is that colonies of thieves and vicious persons cannot so easily congregate as of old. This is so far a public gain; but scattering is not reformation.

A MASTER OF METHOD.

At the same time George Holland did a work that will abide; he certainly left his mark on Whitechapel, and in his teaching and methods of operation he set an example to those who come after him. While thoroughly conservative in his firm hold of Evangelical truth, he was, as an evangelist, as enterprising as the most advanced of his contemporaries could have desired. To him the Gospel of the grace of God was the one hope of the poor; that alone was capable of raising them from squalor and ignorance, to occupy a place in the world such as becomes human beings. And his eye was quick to see, and his hand was ready to supply, so far as was possible, the deficiencies which were inevitable amid their surroundings.



THE LATE MR. GEORGE HOLLAND.

Methods and teaching which such a veteran in the service so well tested and applied will succeed with his successors. It was characteristic of George Holland that he regarded converted children as the best Gospel messengers which it was possible to find to send into the homes of the people. Such factors in the life and labours of those successful pioneers who have laboured and passed away need to be remembered; they should not be forgotten when young workers are advancing with new prescriptions which may be excellent, but are in many cases quite untried.

While the memory of George Holland and of those who worked with him remains green, the world will not be without testimony, founded on the actual results won by successful Christian workers, that quack prescriptions of men's devising will never supersede genuine divine truth. Nothing short of the Gospel will succeed in raising beggars from the dunghill to sit among princes. But the Gospel is a spiritual thing, the truths of which have to be spiritually discerned; and it would be contrary to Scripture itself to expect that Mr. Worldly-Wiseman and his neighbours will detect its true nature. Encouraged by the examples and conquests of those who have gone before, however, we need only to go forward. The tree is still known by its fruits; and nothing that is not of God's own planting will flourish and bear fruit to his glory in such a soil as the East End of London.

The present superintendent of the work of the George Yard Ragged Schools and Mission is Colonel Hayne, who, with a splendid band of co-workers, is carrying on the arduous work in a truly Christ-like spirit.

Mrs. Ginever's Homes.

A YEAR of change and event has been experienced by those who are sustaining the work initiated at Holloway by the late Mrs. Ginever, and now known as Kingsdown Orphanage. It will be remembered that the home at Pemberton Gardens underwent entire renovation, being thoroughly overhauled. The expense incurred by the alterations was considerably increased by the difficulty of adapting what had been originally built for private dwellings into a suitable home for seventy children. Another much-needed alteration which was carried out was the formation of a distinct branch for the boys, the home at Tremlett Grove being entirely used for this purpose. Under the old arrangement it was necessary for boys to leave at ten years of age, when they were still young enough to be a burden to their widowed mothers. This difficulty is now obviated, and under the care of the newly-appointed master and matron, thirty-six boys will be kept until old enough to enter situations. Both at Pemberton Gardens and Tremlett Grove the work has entered upon a new career of usefulness, and has been raised to a higher level.

While the year has been one of difficulty, it has been one of distinct progress. Nor have the workers lost sight of the high purpose for which the institution was initiated. Those who remember how steadfastly the devoted foundress set before her the spiritual good of the children as the supreme end and aim of every effort, will continue in prayer that the service rendered within and without the Homes may tend to that object.

The Secretary is Miss Wenborn, 35, Pemberton Gardens, Upper Holloway, N.

East-End Emigration Fund.—Since the inauguration of this Fund in 1882, nearly six thousand English men, women, and children have been enabled to settle in the various British Colonies, where, with few exceptions, they have made for themselves comfortable homes, and are prospering in every way. Nearly all those assisted last year were either sent at the direct invitation of friends, or had definite prospects on arrival in the Colonies. Only British subjects emigrating to British Colonies receive pecuniary assistance. Letters from emigrants in all parts of the dominions testify to the utility and need of the Fund for helping those whose cases merit consideration. The secretary, Mr. Robert Culver, will forward copies of the annual report to friends interested in the organization. He may be addressed, 34, Newark Street, Stepney, E.

Mr. Thomas Hogben,

FOUNDER OF THE ONE-BY-ONE BAND.

THE subject of this sketch was born in the year 1850, in a quiet country village in Kent. From his earliest recollections the Holy Spirit wrought in him conviction of sin, and in his eighth and ninth years he was awakened many a night in terror by dreams of coming judgment. Later on, one Sunday night, he heard a sermon which led to his determination to follow Christ; and the next week he walked four miles into the town, to see the preacher and to ask the way of salvation. While he was kindly received, the opportunity was lost by the preacher's jokes and entertainment.

Thus for a time the work of grace was stayed. On August 15, 1862, principally through the prayers and persistent efforts of his sister, he was brought to decision, and accepted salvation through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

One of the first lessons which the Lord taught him was that he was saved to save others; and then He laid upon his heart a simple plan by which his life's purpose should be carried out. This was, first to seek unto the Lord for the unsaved, and then to go to such with personal messages from the Lord. Here was the beginning of his One-by-One work, and in his boyhood days he carried in his pocket a small sheet of parchment, upon which were written the names of persons and subjects for daily prayer.

In his twenty-first year, Mr. Hogben embarked upon a business career in France, and amid the rush and cares of life, and the fascinations of the world's pleasures in professing Christian circles, for many years he neglected this God-given charge. This was the cause of backsliding, which he tells to his own shame, that it may stand out as a warning to young Christians to make soul-saving work the chief concern of life. To be absorbed in business and the world's pleasures means not only to be dead to communion with God, but to prove a stumbling-block to other lives.

A NOBLE LIFE WORK.

Some thirteen years ago, by showing him the truths of Ezekiel xxxvi. and John xv., God graciously brought him to see his failure and sin, and the full salvation there is for every believer in Jesus Christ. When he had accepted this, the Lord put him back to learn the first lesson in the school of definite prayer and personal effort to save the lost. Blessed in his own life, he was impelled to start the "One-by-One Working Band," that others might be helped also. In this method there is nothing new; it is the old one upon which our Lord brought together disciples (as shown in John i. 36-51). In following this plan everyone is made to know the secret of prevailing prayer, and the joy of soul-winning.

The One-by-One Working Band consists of Christians of all denominations, who, seeing the need of pure and undefiled religion, are united by intercessory prayer and individual effort to bring souls to Christ. Thus, upon lines where all who serve the Lord agree, it is making for the fulfilment of the Master's prayer: "That they may all be one, even as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee; that they also may be in us; that the world may believe that Thou didst send Me."

Since the formation of the Band thousands in many parts of the world have joined, and, month by month, at the praise meetings at Portsmouth, many notes of thanksgiving come from its members, telling of answered prayer, and thus proving the truth that every one who follows this method is made wise to win souls.

FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

From his early youth Mr. Hogben has been interested in sailors and soldiers, and he is now earnestly seeking to establish a band of praying and working Christians on board every ship, also in every depôt in the Royal Navy, and in different regiments. It is a growing conviction with him that the only hope of saving the men in H.M. Service is upon these lines. To-day sailors and soldiers are well provided for as to their physical and intellectual interests, and the great problem is how to win them for Christ. None can do this work unless filled with the Holy Spirit, and none can do it so well as men in the service who live out Christ's life.

definite believing prayer. Men who are thus trained not only overcome in their own lives, but go forth as missionaries, as many testimonies demonstrate. Individual effort has not, however, caused Mr. Hogben to neglect the crowd. He began to preach as a lad of sixteen, and ever since, by evangelistic missions and open-air services, he has had the joy of gathering a great harvest of souls. For three years he went up and down the country as an evangelist, calling sinners to repentance—a work that many of his friends feel he should be engaged in to-day; but eleven years ago he was invited to settle down in Portsmouth. After a season of earnest waiting upon God, he heard the Divine command, "Go, and surely I will be with thee." He obeyed, and the promise has been blessedly fulfilled.

THE WELCOME MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.

Mr. Hogben's centre of work there is known as the "Welcome Mission." It was begun in a tent in the Commercial Road, and continued for two summer seasons, when over 800 names were registered of those who professed saving faith in Jesus Christ. Eleven years ago a permanent building was provided, and the Empire Music Hall was taken for Sunday night services, when crowds were gathered from classes that do not usually attend a place of worship, and many were born again.

After a few months the hall in Commercial Road was, by force of circumstances, closed to this work. Then an iron hall at the back was taken; but seven years ago, while Mr. Hogben was in London conducting a mission at Dr. Barnardo's, this was sold, and an attempt made to close the work. For a week united prayer was made that the Lord would show his will in the matter, and at length the present Mission House and site in Edinburgh Road were offered. Here a hall has been erected, and throughout the years of its existence, week by week the presence and power of the Spirit of the Lord has been manifested in the conversion of souls.

Efforts subtle and many have been made to strangle the work; but it was born of prayer, it has been maintained by prayer, and jealously kept to the spiritual interests of the souls entrusted to its care. The good hand of God has been upon it, and no power has prevailed to overthrow it. In the trustees and members of the mission, together with many other earnest friends, Mr. Hogben rejoices in loving and hearty co-operation.

PROPOSED PURCHASE.

In the lease of these premises provision is made for purchasing, and as the term shortly expires it has become necessary to effect this. The price agreed upon is £2,200, towards which, in cash and promises, nearly £1,000 has been received. Great care has been taken to place the property upon trust for spiritual work, upon lines purely Evangelical and Protestant. The premises are situated in a central position facing the New Naval Barracks, which are now being erected to accommodate 5,000 men; and it is proposed, as the Lord inclines his stewards to assist in doing so, that a building shall be added, providing small bedrooms and other necessary aids, where Christian men in H.M. Services shall find the quiet and freedom of a truly Christian home. It is also desired to build class-rooms for work among children and young people. This offers a unique investment to all who desire the extension of Christ's kingdom.

The late Rev. F. Baldey, vicar of St. Simons, Southsea, speaking at an anniversary service some time before he died, said: "I have five reasons why my sympathies are strongly with this Mission—(1) Because the Word of God has its rightful place here. (2) Because Christ, the crucified, the living Christ is exalted. (3) Because Christ's coming again is proclaimed. (4) Because the conventions for the promotion of spiritual life have been a blessing to many. (5) Because this platform is an Evangelical Alliance centre, where we all meet as members of the one body, Christ.

We commend Mr. Hogben and his far-reaching work to the prayerful sympathies of our readers.

The Silver Star Society, composed of eager and earnest workers, continues its beneficent endeavours to preach the Gospel and to render service to agencies which have for their object the uplifting of mankind. The Society maintains three mission centres, the voluntary helpers giving Gospel addresses, conducting open-air meetings, giving lantern lectures, &c. The hon. secretary and superintendent is Mr. Walter S. Robbins, 38, Little Ilford Lane, Manor Park, Essex.

Protestantism for the People.

WYCLIFFE PREACHERS' MOVEMENT.

THERE is probably no more remarkable proof of the acceptability of the Evangelical principles of the Reformation, or, in other words, of the pure Gospel of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, than that afforded by the wonderful success which has attended the missions of the Kensit Crusade and Wycliffe Preachers. Though still but an infant movement, having been started in August, 1898, it has acquired a popularity and achieved an amount of work which marks it out as a prodigy in the home missionary field.

To the readers of The Christian who have contributed during the year £82 to the funds of this vigorous crusade, it will be of interest to know something of its operations throughout the country. The propaganda has always been of a two-fold nature, the presentation of the way of life being carefully mingled with the exposure of sacerdotalism and priestcraft, as they are at present existing within the pale of the National Church, and thus a double missionary enterprise has been simultaneously carried out. The great question, "How to reach the masses," has been satisfactorily solved; the dubious inquiry, "Is it likely that people can be got into halls in the heat of summer, or persuaded to stand for hours in the open air in the depth of winter?" has long since met with a triumphant reply.

Remembering the divinely inspired warning, "He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap," no circumstance, no "local conditions," no party antipathies, have been allowed to interfere with steady progress. From city to city, from town to town, and from village to village the cry has been raised, "For God, king, and country, we must preserve the glorious Truth recovered for us by the sufferings of our martyred forefathers," and wonderful, indeed, has been the response met with on all hands.

THE YEAR'S REPORT.

The year's report gives a truly astonishing epitome of these consecutive missions. Two bands of preachers moving in different directions have succeeded in compassing no less than 284 towns, and in addressing 300,000 people during the past twelve months; while from the commencement of the campaign the meetings held in towns alone have numbered 2,136, and the total number of people addressed 721,515. This does not include numerous excursions into priest-ridden villages, which have provided some of the most striking of the many remarkable scenes incident to this work.

We may mention the village of Parkstone, in Dorset, where the week's mission was ushered in by eight meetings held on the Sunday. The whole village seemed to be out, and on each succeeding night 800 people were gathered together in the square. Sacerdotalism is rampant, but the mass of the people were heartily with the crusade, a fact which speaks for itself.

Gamlingay, in Cambridge, another centre of extreme Ritualism, was a second village in which practically the whole population gathered to listen to the addresses night after night.

Turning to the large towns, such well-known halls have been occupied as the Town Hall, Portsmouth; the Dome, Brighton; the Oddfellows' Hall, Middlesbrough; the Central Hall, Darlington; the Borough Hall, Guildford; the Great Hall, Tunbridge Wells, and many others; each in its turn being crammed to excess with people anxious to hear an address from the founder of the movement, Mr. John Kensit, or his son, Mr. J. A. Kensit.

During the year Mr. John Kensit has addressed 149 meetings, and Mr. J. A. Kensit 220. The preachers have a regular chaplain who visits each band periodically, speaking wise words of counsel and instruction, as well as himself taking no small part in the addressing of the various gatherings. The Rev. J. C. Willcox, of Shepscombe, Gloucester, occupies this position. Another branch of the work, which is by no means the least effectual, is the circulation of all kinds of literature upon every phase of the great questions at issue. The report shows that a vast quantity of tracts and pamphlets have thus been placed in the hands of the people—as a lasting and solid means of instruction and enlightenment.

WHAT LADIES CAN DO.

Nor are the ladies an unrecognised force in helping forward this important work at the present critical juncture, for we find there is a "Ladies' Union of Workers," which has laboured quietly but diligently during the more aggressive operations of the Wycliffites, under the guidance of Mrs. Kensit, with the object of realizing sufficient funds to support extra preachers, by holding periodical sales of work. This effort has been attended with the success characteristic of the whole movement, one new preacher being already provided for. The secret of this successful missionary effort is found in thus carrying the Gospel to the people, without regard to let or hindrance. Unconventional and outspoken, it has secured a sympathy and a hearty co-operation as unusual and as spontaneous as that which draws it out.

From all parts of the country have come testimonials as to the lasting and solid character of the work accomplished, and many upon whom the delusive charms of Ritualism had begun to exert their subtle influence, have written in terms of unmeasured gratitude for the awakening which has resulted from the utterances of the preachers. To the various protests which are by this time familiar to every reader of The Christian we need add but little, save, perhaps, in reference to the last, offered at the confirmation of the present Bishop of London. As soon as Mr. Kensit heard that this cleric was to receive promotion to the important See of London, he made preparations in accordance with the legal provision for the lodging of a formal protest on a number of all-sufficient grounds.

This protest was a great eye-opener to the British public, and was largely commented upon in the Press. As long as ritualistic appointments continue, there would appear to be no other way of expressing the feelings of Protestants than that which Mr. Kensit has adopted, lamentable as are the scenes which accompany it, though not more lamentable than the causes which give it birth. Of the futility of approaching the legally constituted authorities with a request to interfere in cases of ritualistic illegality or of ecclesiastical lawlessness, Mr. Kensit has had a surfeit of proof, and nothing less than the failure of such overtures as have been made from time to time, would have induced him to adopt the methods which he has deemed necessary, in the face of episcopal lethargy and indifference.

The cost of maintaining a Wycliffe preacher is about £100 per annum. Mr. Kensit makes an earnest appeal for further funds to enable him to extend the work which has been so eminently successful in arousing the nation to the dangers of the sacerdotal conspiracy. His address is 18, Paternoster Row, E.C.

The Rescue Society.—"No, that I never will!" was the determined remark of a girl of twenty, a few months since, in reply to a suggestion that she would have to go to the union. The circumstances of her case were considered, and though somewhat unusual, she was admitted to one of the homes of the Rescue Society, and is now happy in a good situation, and her mistress writes she believes her to be truly converted to God. Compassion for the poor fallen woman or the weak, endangered, or friendless girl, and the earnest longing not only to save and rescue them from the sin of their life, but to bring them all by the Gospel of the grace of God into the fold of the Good Shepherd, the Church of the Living God, is the spirit which still moves the heart of the workers of the Rescue Society as it did its founder nearly fifty years ago. Many are now matronly women, occupying in their own families, or elsewhere, positions of love and esteem; while a still larger number of young women are trusted and respected by their employers, never now suspected of having been rescue cases, yet they were once known as inmates of this Society's homes. The correspondence with these former inmates forms no light task, scarcely a day passing without some such letter. One of the latest letters reads—"As long as I am spared you shall always have a yearly subscription from me. I will try to make it never less than one guinea, and if I can send more I will." The address of the secretary, Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, is 79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

Contiuuing the Reformation.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.

MUCH attention, prayer, Christian sympathy, and monetary help are given, and rightly given, to the evangelization of Roman Catholics in Ireland and abroad. Wherever Romanism is dominant, the spiritual destitution, moral depravity, intellectual poverty and temporal disadvantages of the people are too plainly evident to be overlooked; but it is to be feared that the duty of evangelizing Roman Catholics in England and Wales is entirely forgotten by many who are willing helpers of the work abroad.

No doubt the relatively small proportion of Romanists among the population, the careful suppression of some of the worst features of popular Romanism, the multiplicity of evangelistic agencies, and the perpetual activity of modern religious life, have something to do with this sad indifference. And yet in England Romanism is essentially the same as elsewhere. The most cursory acquaintance with Romanism in any English town where it is numerically strong, will prove that superstition and ignorance of Gospel truth, and all its attendant evils, abound. There is the same close surveillance of the people by the priests, nuns, and other official caretakers of the Roman Church, the same constant demands upon their means for alleged spiritual benefits, the same tyrannical pressure to prevent inquiry or the hearing of the Gospel.

At the present time, many are heard to express great alarm at the multiplication of Romish proselytizing agencies, at the new coming of the monks and nuns, friars and Jesuits, at the boasted success of Rome in the possession of the upper classes; but very few seem to appreciate the fact that one of the best methods to counteract all this is to draw off the enemies' forces by a counter-attack.

The presence in every important Romish centre of influence of a resident Protestant missionary, equipped by Divine grace in spiritual things, and specially trained in the whole controversy with Rome for meeting the popular sophistries of the people, and the subtle arguments of the priests, would soon compel Rome to defend her own citadels.

A SPECIAL AGENCY NEEDED.

The presence of such a missionary, diligently labouring for the conversion of Roman Catholics to Christ, and to preserve Protestants from the snares of Romanism, would require the Roman propagandists to centre their energies upon the preservation of what they have, instead of expending them upon the perversion of our fellow-countrymen. But there is also the higher and nobler reason why the Protestants should at once awake to some adequate sense of their duty in this matter. One and a half millions of our Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen are in need of Gospel light, and love, and liberty. Prejudice, early training, and submission to false authority close to them the ordinary ministries of Protestant Christianity. They can only be reached by a special agency which makes a special study of their needs, and then lays itself out to meet them.

Such an agency has long existed in the Protestant Reformation Society, launched on its long career in 1827—it has for seventy-five years worked on under the guidance of some of the greatest and best men who have served the cause of Christ in their generations.

Under varying conditions, but always with greater or less success, it has accomplished (as far as the means entrusted to it have permitted) a two-fold mission, viz., the maintenance of the Scriptural principles of the Reformation, and the Evangelization of Roman Catholics in England.

A WIDE AREA COVERED.

During the past year it has added two new stations to its list, and at the present time has missions and missionaries in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Bristol, Oxford, Hastings, St. Leonards, Leamington, Bromley (Kent), Tunbridge Wells, Hayfield, Weston-super-Mare, Leyton, and Upton Park.

It will be found that each station is worked with a due regard for local needs, and with a great variety of method. In some stations the work is more of a defensive character, in others more aggressive, but the main purpose of the Society is carried out in all.

But much remains to be done. Quite thirty mission stations should be permanently supplied, and there should also be an itinerant staff who could go for shorter or longer periods to places where the number of Roman Catholics is comparatively small, or where Rome commences, as she often does, fresh proselytizing work. The Society ought to be the efficient handmaid of all clergy and ministers who have numbers of Roman Catholics within their parishes, and who feel that these cannot be reached by the ordinary Christian worker.

There is no space left to speak of the Society's other branches of labour, of its ceaseless efforts against Ritualism, of the great work of its superintendent (Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D.), of its widespread teaching by means of lantern lectures, of its continuous stream of literature, of its grants of standard works to libraries, schools, colleges, the clergy, and others, &c. But perhaps sufficient has been said to awaken some to a deeper sense of responsibility, and to call out additional helpers into this greatly neglected field of Christian service.

The offices of the Society are at 62, Berners Street, W.C.; Mr. W. A. Limbrick, Secretary.

The Jesuit Peril.

WORK OF THE PROTESTANT ALLIANCE.

WE know of nothing in recent years which has so thoroughly stirred the Protestants of England, and secured their enthusiastic approval, as the announcement that the Protestant Alliance will attempt to drive back the swarm of members of the so-called "religious orders" of the Church of Rome. It is, we think, reasonably affirmed by the executive of the Protestant Alliance, that the causes which brought about the flight of the monks from France are in themselves sufficient reasons why the settlement of such men in England should not be allowed.

Happily it is not necessary to go to Parliament to pass a law for protection from monkish marauders, for we have a law, ready to our hands, which Roman Catholics accepted in the year of their emancipation, as a condition upon which those professing the Papal creed were admitted to the Houses of the Legislature.

That no one has apparently thought of enforcing this law before, is no reason why it should any longer remain a dead letter, and Englishmen will feel an additional interest in the old and well-tried Protestant Alliance on account of this new evidence of its activity, and may well hope that its legal action, though cumbrous, expensive, and by no means certain, will end in the defeat of designing men whose presence is unwelcome, and even hateful, in every other country in Europe.

It will be remembered that the Alliance has, during the present year, celebrated its jubilee by great Protestant demonstrations in the Queen's Hall, and that an appeal is being made for a reserve fund of £2,000 as a memorial of its first jubilee.

Litigation like that just begun will probably absorb the ordinary income in a very short time, and a reserve fund ought not therefore to be wanting. We earnestly hope that those who have the silver and gold will readily supply the "sinews of war."

One of the many interesting ways in which the work of the Alliance is carried on is by means of a monthly organ, which is an interesting and instructive periodical, dealing with all phases of the Roman Catholic controversy, whether "Anglican" or "Roman." It is written in a popular style, so that "the man in the street" can read and understand it. It contains well-drawn illustrations, which appeal to the eye with good effect.

It was well remarked by The Record newspaper, in the early part of the present year, when the energies of the Alliance were directed to defeating the determined attempt to remove from the British Constitution the one remaining safeguard for preserving the Protestantism of the Crown and the principles of civil and religious liberty, that "so long as there is such a vigorous and alert organization to combat the machinations of Rome, we may confidently feel that the day of Rome's real progress (much less supremacy) in this country is happily far distant."

"Three Cheers"

FOR THE STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE!

BY THE PRESIDENT, THOMAS SPURGEON.

I HAVE just enjoyed reading a few of C. H. Spurgeon's Christmas letters to his big family at Stockwell. They brought from Mentone some of the winter sunshine of the Riviera, and not a little of the warmth and brightness of the writer's genial disposition. They are full of wit and wisdom, judiciously blended. They breathe love for the dear children in every sentence, and each missive expresses the desire that they may learn to love and serve God.

It goes without saying that the notes are full of good cheer. I'll be bound that there was something more than a ripple of laughter among the children at the bare idea of their President riding on the moon from Mentone to Stockwell, and dropping down from the ceiling IF he heard their voices. Well might the writer add, "That is a great big IF." But why speak of hearing their voices, and why talk of listening for them "between one and two o'clock?" Just because that is cheering time, and dear father in each letter charges the children to give "three times three" for the trustees, and the staff, and the donors of special gifts for the Christmas festival. These cheers were duly accorded with no bated breath, but the heartiest "three times three" was reserved for the absent President. All the forces of love and lung were combined in a mighty effort then. Really, if he did not hear, it was no fault of the orphans.

In one of these remarkable epistles the children's "loving friend," as he was glad to style himself, exclaimed—for the double underscoring, and the three marks of exclamation, seem to make the sentence speak—

THREE CHEERS FOR STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE!!!

What a shout uprose when that was called for! Christmas, 1890, was the date of it, but I think I hear the echoes yet. Not that I heard it then, for I was sixteen times more distant than the President, but if the cheer might reach the South of France, why not also the shores of New Zealand? The "if" is only somewhat bigger.

"Three cheers for the Stockwell Orphanage!" Yes, indeed; the lads and lasses had good reason to respond lustily to that sentiment. But hip-hip-hooraying, cheering though it is, does not fill the treasury. The real cheer must come from the pockets of subscribers, rather than from the throats of orphans. I want my readers, though no sweet letters come from the Sunny South to them or to the fatherless children, to provide the cheer all the same. "The memory of the just is blessed!" For the sake of him who passed from Mentone to the Master's presence, as well as for the sake of the dear Master Himself, let every reader of this note say, "Three cheers for the Stockwell Orphanage!" and then proceed to give them. The exact nature of them must be left to each cheerer. Beggars must not be choosers; a suggestion may, however, be ventured:—

Well then, here is Cheer No. 1.—An assurance that the Stockwell Orphanage shall be remembered in private, family, and (if opportunity serves) public prayer.

Cheer No. 2.—The immediate despatch of a token, as substantial as possible, of loving interest in the Christmas festivities, and a determination to be a frequent subscriber to the general fund.

Cheer No. 3.—A resolve to interest one's own and other people's children in the Stockwell Orphanage, and to suggest to the Sunday-school that it shall help to carry on the good work among the fatherless, founded by C. H. Spurgeon.

Thrice cheered would be the hearts of the President, and his brother, and the Trustees, by hooraying of this practical kind.

The cheers for donors are loud and long already, for they are always giving "three times three" for the Orphanage. I merely ask you for an emphatic encore this year. A Happy Christmas to you all!

Beginning Life Afresh.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

A FARMER, being asked how he became possessed of such beautiful sheep, replied, "I take care of the lambs." This reply brings to mind the twice repeated command of the Lord when He, who is the Good Shepherd, said, "Feed my lambs."

In the Sheltering Home for Orphan and Destitute Children, Myrtle Street, Liverpool, Mrs. Birt has for twenty-nine years been carrying out this great command, receiving and caring for the orphan and destitute little ones found astray.

The first care is for their physical nurture, cleansing, clothing, and educating them, to show these little ones practically the love of the Good Shepherd. Thus their hearts become inclined, through the tender care bestowed on them, to listen while they are taught of God's greatest gift to men, even the gift of his Son.

In the spring time this large family rapturously become young emigrants, and very gladly set sail for Canada, where, among a healthy, God-fearing population, FOUR THOUSAND young people, from this one Society, have grown up into robust manhood and womanhood.

Among them may be found those who have become, through the opportunities offering under the Canadian School system, and through the energy derived from the fine bracing climate, pastors and teachers, while some follow professions, and many work their own farms.

C. H. was one such uncared for little one, whose father was dead before he came to the Sheltering Home, and whose prospects in life twenty years ago were all dark, with seemingly no "silver lining" to inspire hope in him or for him. A clergyman who had led his Sunday-school to be interested in and collect for the Sheltering Home, sent C. H. to Mrs. Birt, recommending the lad to her care in the Home.

After receiving care and training, C. H. was sent to Canada, and there placed with a farmer. He stayed for many years, rapidly improving, as time passed, in health and education, and as soon as he was old and strong enough to receive remuneration for his work, saving a considerable part of his wages.

The "bread cast upon the waters," in the days of his "Sheltering Home" training in Liverpool, was found after the "many days" and C. H. yielded his young heart and life to Jesus Christ, seeking to make Him Lord, and to serve Him faithfully. His mother having died, C.H. at once sent his sister's passage money for her to go to him in Canada, and he has since surrounded her with a brother's affection and care.

Working hard, and improving every opportunity which came to him, C. H. passed through the elementary school into the high school, each year increasing his store of knowledge, so that in time, having received help in Greek and Latin in the winter evenings from the minister of the church to which he belonged, he went to college, with money saved out of his own earnings.

Now he is a fully ordained minister of a parish and congregation, where he is a successful worker, and through him two applications were received for boys from the Canadian Home to be placed with parishioners.

Would not one such life be worth saving? But there are very many of whom a similar history could be given—taking active part in church, Sunday school, and temperance work. Yet, if left uncared for, would they not have been among the "lapsed masses" of the great cities, and lost to country and their God?

The Hon. Treasurer is E. C. Thin, Esq., 24 Chapel Street, Liverpool.

A Veritable Bee-hive.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

THE Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society is a many-sided organization. Numerous philanthropic agencies set on foot by individual workers have been incorporated in it, owing to their promoters' confidence in the good sense and business acumen of the council. Its succession of presidents—the great Earl of Shaftesbury, the Earl of Aberdeen, and now the Marquis of Northampton, with the direct patronage of the late Queen Victoria and His Majesty the King, have strengthened public confidence in its efficiency and usefulness.

Financially, this is shown in the fact that whereas up to 1878 the funds disbursed did not exceed £2,500, the total payments in 1900-1 were £19,300. The accounts are audited by Mr. Percy Child, chartered accountant, and a copy of the report and balance-sheet can be obtained on application to the secretary, Mr. John Kirk, 32, John Street, W.C.

The R.S.U. not only maintains direct movements, but is the parent, counsellor and friend of no fewer than 152 affiliated missions, which cover every sort of religious, temperance, recreative, social, educational and industrial agency.

Several agents and superintendents, together with the necessary clerical staff, and teachers in the day and night schools are paid, but the great bulk of the work is done by voluntary assistants. In the various Sunday-schools are 3,770 teachers; and nearly a thousand visitors call upon the 7,000 cripples on the register in Greater London. Of the total expenditure of the Society less than 7 per cent. is absorbed in salaries.

In the summer just ended, nearly 40,000 boys and girls have used Shaftesbury Holiday House at Loughton for a day's outing in Epping Forest provided by the Fresh Air Funds; 5,000 children and youths have spent a fortnight's holiday in R.S.U.'s Holiday S.C. Homes, or in cottages by the sea and in the country. This year 1,200 crippled boys and girls have spent a fortnight or month (and some a year) in the R.S.U.'s Holiday Homes at Southend, Margate, Bournemouth, or at the Princess Christian's Cripples' Home, Windsor. The moral and physical advantages accruing, surprise even those most interested.

ALL SORTS OF RELIEF.

The Barefoot Mission is of unspeakable value, helping not only the outcast and waif, but the child of the widow and of the self-respecting poor. During the year nearly 40,000 garments —some new, some worn—have been distributed, and 4,000 pairs of boots and shoes, mostly new. These are signed for as loan gifts, thus preventing misappropriation.

£500 was spent in supplying surgical instruments, chairs, spinal carriages, and other aids to helpless cripples. This work is done in harmonious co-operation with the Hospital Sunday and Saturday Funds, the Invalid Children's Aid Society, and other bodies.

Flowers, scrap-books, sea shells, toys, and games have been distributed as received amongst crippled and poor, causing endless delight.

The R.S.U. maintains the Ashley Mission in Bethnal Green, and the Shaftesbury Welcome Gipsies' Mission in Battersea; and aids scores of affiliated missions in various parts of London. Their agencies are most varied—penny banks, clothing clubs, goose clubs, gymnasiums, boys' brigades, besides night schools, Christian Endeavour Societies, Sunday-schools, and general Evangelical religious work.

The R.S.U. officials and helpers are the willing agents of Sir Wm. Treloar in the annual Guildhall banquet at Christmas; of the Editor of Home Words in his Robin Dinners; and the Union carries on several soup kitchens; provides free meals to the outcast, and furnishes lanterns and slides for instruction and amusement. This great movement, for such it is, reaching weekly no less than 100,000 souls, is permeated with a Christian spirit. The soul is the primary concern, and the humanitarian and elevating agencies are only regarded as means to an end. Prayer is the atmosphere which surrounds the work, and the blessed results graciously vouchsafed by God are cause for deep thankfulness and praise. A large number of the present workers were once scholars themselves. Having found the Saviour, they are now passing on the blessing to another generation. This religious aim and purpose has all along characterized the Ragged School Movement, and the conversions taking place, as well as the holy influences diffused, set the seal of God's Spirit to the work in all its branches, and proclaim it to be of and from Him.

"Old and Grey-headed."

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

FOR nearly one hundred years this useful and much-needed society has been enabled to carry on its beneficent work among the Lord's aged poor, distributing its pensions through the agency of Christian friends, whose visits to the recipients are eagerly looked forward to, thus providing a channel for sympathy and visitation, which is not one of the least valuable features of the institution. Its working expenses are so moderate that the late Sir H. W. Peek, Bart., said, "I have carefully read the report and balance-sheet, and from a business standpoint can recommend the Society as one in which good value is given for the money entrusted to it, as there appears to be the maximum of good at the minimum of cost."

The Hon. Mr. Justice Bruce, when presiding over the last annual meeting, said: "The Society may be called honourable, for it has stood the test of time. How many sorrows has it softened! how many homes has it gladdened! It has special claims upon our support because it is engaged in work necessary and urgent, yet apt to be overlooked or forgotten. It is a Christian privilege to minister to God's aged poor, therefore let us endeavour to promote the prosperity of this institution."

The Society is based upon Scriptural truth, and its work is of an undenominational character; within the bounds of Evangelical Protestantism, all qualified candidates, nominated by contributors, are eligible for help. No less than 1,566 pensioners, living in various parts of the United Kingdom, are now in receipt of pensions, amounting to £11,500 per annum. In the four homes 176 of the pensioners have peaceful dwelling places in life's eventide. To support the Institution in all its branches a daily income of £37 is required; the regular contributions fall short of this amount, hence the need of additional subscriptions and donations.

THE TRUEST FORM OF CHARITY.

The pensions of the Society enable many hundreds of God's aged poor to maintain their own little homes, and spend their declining days in comparative freedom from anxiety as to how to meet their rent, and from the haunting fear of having to end their days in the workhouse. Many distressing cases in all parts of the country have recently been placed upon the pension list. Miss M. B. has a little school of twelve; she receives in fees 3s. weekly, and pays rent at the rate of 2s. 10d. per week. Mrs. M. A. P. is nearly blind; her husband is unable to work, and she tries to eke out a living by doing a little washing. Many have formerly occupied comfortable positions; some of the men have struggled to earn a few shillings by gardening, shoemaking, and general work; the women, by dressmaking, nursing, and needlework, have striven to keep the wolf from the door. The little savings of years have been exhausted, and in some instances furniture has been gradually disposed of; some of the recipients have for upwards of fifty years been followers of the Lord Jesus. Two letters from pensioners will give glimpses of the character of the recipients of the Society:—

(a) I write on behalf of my mother to acknowledge the regular receipt of the pension, which is always most gratefully accepted, and is the means of much temporal comfort and help to her in her weakly health and declining days. We feel that we have great cause for praise because of the gracious, tender care of our good heavenly Father in providing for our needs, and although some of the chapters in life's experience have been dark and trying, yet we feel that the testing times are seasons of learning to lean more fully on Him who has said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee."

(b) I know not how to express my gratitude for the increase of my pension. I went straight to the Lord to return my thanks for such a sweet surprise. Oh, it will be of great service to me, for I am not able to earn anything.

A country friend writes:—"In asking for help for your Society I always emphasize that it supports those of God's family who cannot help themselves. I am sure that anyone visiting the Homes would require no other witness."

Mr. J. E. Hazelton, the Secretary, may be addressed at the Society's Office, 88, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

In London Theatres.

SPECIAL SERVICES COMMITTEE.

TAKING wise advantage of the readiness of non-churchgoers to attend evangelistic services in theatres and music-halls, the United Committee for Special Religious Services has well maintained the operations which it commenced in such popular buildings some forty-two years since.

The latest report of the work gives graphic accounts of the many unconventional, but spiritually fruitful, gatherings of the past twelve months. From Hammersmith to Canning Town, from Clapham to Islington, crowds have been gathered in, and the Gospel message has been received with earnest attention.

Of the work at the Shakespeare Theatre, encouraging testimony is given. A typical case is that of a young fellow who is the last of his family to be brought to Christ. The whole family are now on the way as pilgrims to a better country. They have all been brought into light at the theatre services. Since his conversion he has grown in grace, and is a valuable help in the work.

The services in the Pavilion Theatre, that great place of amusement situated in the chief thoroughfare of East London, have also been fruitful. The missionary in charge writes: "At every service I had testimony that some went away impressed. I always endeavour to be at the door and shake hands with all I can; and many men and women have added to the warm shake of the hand, 'God bless these services.' I constantly meet with men and women who address me by name, and when I ask how they know me, they say they have attended the theatre services. One of these told me that he had much cause to thank God. He and his family had not been to a place of worship for years until they were persuaded to come to our services. 'The hymns,' he said, 'brought back recollections of my young days, when I was at Sunday school. I continued attending, and my wife, who first became converted, prayed with me. I never knew what the power of God could do before, and at last I got peace to my troubled soul.' He also told me that two of his children had given their hearts to the Lord, and now they are all members at Pott Street Chapel."

The committee of Shaftesbury Hall, Tottenham, too, record many interesting cases, notably the following two:—"Mr. C——, seventy-five years of age, and formerly a sceptic, has, as the outcome of attending our meetings, been brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. This makes the fourth member of the family who has derived spiritual benefit at our Hall. Mr. and Mrs. D——, who had led a wretchedly unhappy life, chiefly through the drink, have now not only become total abstainers, but have also thrown in their lot with God's people."

The secretary of the United Committee is Rev. T. C. Udall, 3, Bridewell Place, New Bridge Street, E.C.

The Chief Concern.—A candle wakes some men as well as a noise. The eye of the Lord works upon a good soul as much as his hand; and the godly man is as much affected with this consideration, The Lord sees me, as with this, The Lord strikes me.—Donne.

Evangelizing the Soldiers.

FOR twenty-seven years the Gospel work among soldiers, superintended by the Misses Perks, has steadily grown in usefulness and blessing, until the bright and homely institutions at Winchester have become known and loved by military men wherever the British flag flies.

Commencing at the Central Home, the operations have extended in many ways. An inspiring evangelistic work is carried on, and has spread to surrounding villages, and, in order to meet a growing need, an attractive building, "The Welcome," has been opened in the High Street as a coffee-bar and reading-room for soldiers.

ON BOARD THE TROOP-SHIPS.

The mission, however, transcends local bounds. The visitation of troopships has enormously developed, and the Misses Perks and their industrious agents have, by official permission, undertaken the visitation of all the transports at Southampton, the port of embarkation and disembarkation. Such labour is rich with opportunities for sowing the precious seed of the Gospel, particularly when troops are sailing for Africa. The affecting circumstances of the farewell, and the solemn thoughts of the grave possibilities of the immediate future, tend to soften the heart and prepare the way for the evangelist. Besides personal dealing, the men are addressed in groups in the embarkation sheds and on board.

Many of these poor fellows will see Old England no more. Recently, Miss Perks noticed a familiar name in the list of deaths from enteric, and at once wrote to the mother of the young soldier who was specified. "Yes," was the reply, "it is my boy." But "he had written such a bright letter, saying, 'Do not fret for me, mother, whatever happens, for I am so happy in my new-found Friend, the Lord Jesus Christ.'" He had been brought to the Lord through the troopship work.

During the summer efforts were put forth in the interests of the soldiers encamped on Salisbury Plain. A little colony comprising tents for refreshments and evangelistic services, added picturesqueness to the scene on the "English veldt." Many of the men surrendered to the great Captain of their salvation and bore witness to his redeeming power.

BIBLES FOR SOLDIERS.

The distribution on troopships of Bibles, marked Testaments, and Gospel portions, is a fruitful and important department. Tens of thousands of copies have been given away, and this helpful work still calls for generous support. It will be readily understood, too, that a large correspondence has to be maintained with men who have been into contact with the Homes. Parcels of clothing, and comforts of various useful kinds, are in great demand, and these the Misses Perks are able to get safely delivered to the various regiments.

The great object of the Mission is, of course, to win souls for the Master; and encouraging facts which are continually transpiring show how richly it has been blessed. At the recent Soldiers' Convention at Exeter Hall, for example, Sergeant J. P. Hill said, in the course of a flowing testimony: "For many years before I enlisted I was very unhappy. The Spirit of God was correcting me. . . . Sick at heart, I determined to enlist. I joined the King's Royal Rifles, and was sent to the depôt at Winchester. 'The darkest moments are just before the dawn.' I found myself in the Soldiers' Home, and soon learned what I was longing to know. Never can I thank God enough." Sergeant Hill has since been actively engaged in the Lord's work in South Africa, whither he has now returned.

A SOLDIER MISSIONARY.

"Let me ask you," writes one of the South Wales Borderers, now with the South African forces, "for some Bibles, Testaments, and Sankey's hymn books. We recall the meetings on Salisbury Plain, and the impressions then received are as fresh as ever. I mean to live for Christ."

The Misses Perks are now doing useful work among the distressed widows and orphans of those who have fallen. It will be seen, therefore, that there are heavy financial responsibilities to be borne, and it is to be hoped that these will receive the earnest consideration of the Lord's stewards. Communications should be addressed, The Misses Perks, Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

Rescue and Preventive Work.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE" MISSION.

ON all sides we have evidences that Christmas is once more at hand. It will be my twenty-third Christmas Day in Ratcliff, and on looking back I do not think that either I or my helpers would wish to have spent the days elsewhere. There comes to our memories many a happy gathering; and we love to think how many there are now earning an honest livelihood who still remember that it was at the "Bridge of Hope" they first realized the meaning of "Peace on earth and goodwill toward men."

But although we have been here so long, I am convinced that the "Bridge of Hope" is as much needed in Ratcliff to-day, in its three-fold character of Rescue, Preventive, and Night-Shelter work, as it was when its doors were first opened to those who had no other hope of escape from a life of shame.

This Home is always full of young girls, each one of whom has been in desperate need of protection from the temptations to which such friendless, lonely girls in London are exposed. M. B., not sixteen years of age, has been neglected all her life by a drunken, dissolute mother, or dragged from one public-house to another and into places of still worse character—what wonder that she grew up wild and rough? She is, however, improving, and when sufficiently trained will probably do well in service. In the meantime, but for the friends she finds here, she is utterly alone. As she herself pathetically said, "No one in the wide world cared what became of me." She has written to the wretched mother, naturally clinging to that one tie, but the letters come back. Could any young life be more in need of care and protection? And yet there are here many, just as deeply in need of mothering.

Then the Children's Homes are always full, so that only the most urgent cases can be received. For instance, A. E. was brought to us by a police-court missionary. She was "found wandering." Upon investigation, the magistrate found that the child had been grossly neglected, the mother being dead. She seems a bright, intelligent child, likely to do well under training. A poor widow came to us with her little girl of eight, and a very pitiful story of her trouble. She was herself in service, so that she might support her little ones. This child was boarded out with a woman who apparently bore a good character. The poor mother could not visit her often, but sent payments and clothing regularly, believing all was well. But she learned from neighbours that the woman had taken to drinking heavily, and that often she kept the child in public-houses until closing time, and in the streets until still later, pawning every garment she could strip from the little one, even leaving her with bare feet. The poor mother was advised to come to us, and was most thankful to leave her child in safe keeping.

In the Night Shelter a good work is going on, and many otherwise utterly hopeless ones, are inspired with courage to begin again. One poor young woman, twenty years of age, had sat night after night on a door-step with her tiny infant in her arms. She almost stripped herself of clothing to protect the baby, whilst she herself was shivering in the cold. She was helped and is doing well. One day she came to tell us she was going to a meeting for women—she wanted to tell them what God had done for her.

Three young women came for help, but refused to go into Homes, which it was necessary they should do for a time. They stayed in the Shelter a few days, and then left, not willing to do as we advised. But very soon they all three returned, wishing to do whatever we thought best, saying, "that some words they had heard in the Shelter seemed to go with them wherever they went, and they could not rest." We could multiply cases in illustration of the work done, but I think enough has been written to prove that an open door is very necessary still, for those who are despairing and hopeless.

For all this work we need funds. Over two hundred and fifty to feed and clothe daily would soon bring us into arrears, if subscriptions do not come in. To-day there is no balance at the bank, and I need a considerable sum to meet immediate claims. We have never, during all the twenty-three years of our work here, experienced quite so difficult a time as the last few months. God is faithful, and our Lord has stood by and strengthened us; but He has given the poor and the helpless ones in trust to his followers, and it is to the Church of Christ we look for the means to carry on this difficult but inexpressibly-happy work, as long as life and strength may last.

Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.

THE Prison Mission, founded by Mrs. Meredith, is maintained on the lines laid down by herself, preaching Christ first as the spring of all good, to whom the weary and heavy laden can always bring their load of sin, and from Him only can get life and liberty.

Some 260 were provided with regular work in the Mission at Clapham in the year 1900, many of whom have gone out since into honest ways of livelihood, and are able to praise God for deliverance from bondage.

In the same year 24,000 letters, in nearly all languages, were sent into the whole world, telling of the power of the Saviour to set the captives free; men and women within prison walls everywhere heard the message of good tidings, all letters being written by hands indited by loving hearts.

In the school of the Mission in the year 1900, 180 girls, with few exceptions the little ones of prisoners, were sheltered in a Happy Home, and trained for the service of the Master.

The industries of the women are various. Laundry-work and slipper and mat making and plain needlework occupy them. We shall be very glad if friends will give us orders for any of them; these hearers of the Word must not be idle, but must learn to work with their hands that they in turn may be able to help others. Old subscribers are passing away, and this Mission is suffering from the same difficulties that all such are passing through now.

Will you, dear friends, help us with your sympathy, contributions, and prayers? Many of our old friends and subscribers, as I have said, are passing away, and their places need to be supplied. The growth of this Mission encourages all Mrs. Meredith's helpers to go on day by day with her labour of love; from a seedling it has sprung vigorously up, and its branches are bearing much fruit at home, and in many lands sounds of the Gospel message are sounding out from it.

We never refuse help to any suitable cases, believing that He whose love we endeavour to commend would not refuse his aid.

M. A. LLOYD, Hon. Sec.

Homes for Working Girls.—The committee of the Homes for Working Girls in London—the nine houses accommodating 514 persons—find themselves face to face with a deficit on the current year of nearly £800. "It is a heartfelt sorrow to find each year that the number of respectable, homeless, and friendless girls and young women increases. It matters not what occupation they follow, they are homeless." The founder and director is Mr. John Shrimpton, 3, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

God's Presence draws forth his praises, as the return of the sun in the spring and summer causes the earth to thrust forth her fruits and flowers, that they may, as it were, meet and do homage to the fountain of their beauty.—Bishop Reynolds.

Sixty Years among the Needy

THE FIELD LANE INSTITUTIONS.

OF happy omen should surely be the fact that, with the new century, comes the celebration of the diamond jubilee of one of the finest examples of rescue, refuge, and industrial school work, which this vast and terrible city of ours has ever seen—aye, and even applauded, too. Just think of it. Sixty years of heroic attempt to save the souls and bodies of thousands of God's atoms groping amid the darkness of a nether world of vice, infamy, and degradation, appalling indeed to imagine, much more so to encounter in all its actual hideousness. Yet the great responsibility has been cheerfully accepted; the canker attacked with enthusiasm and energy, which cannot fail to have aroused feelings of respect from every admirer of philanthropic, remedial effort, who has the spiritual and bodily welfare of his fellow-creatures really at heart.

Such is the keynote of the task which has been undertaken in a righteous cause. And who shall dare contend that the fight has not been wagered with a persistent resolve and patience worthy of the very highest praise? "Look on this picture and on that," is the ready comment which rises to the lips when reviewing so fair a retrospect. Religion, shelter, reform, industry, education, temperance, are they not now all happily blended as indisputable evidence of the success which, by Divine will, has attended the labours of those sixty long years of gradual, strenuous progression? As some splendid oriflamb they seem to wave in union over that Vine Street building and its branches in eloquent testimony of good deeds accomplished, with an incentive to fresh exertions on behalf of those submerged earthlings, doomed, alas! to struggle so helplessly in a slough of corruption from which rescue so often comes only through the vicarious aid rendered by such institutions as the one under notice.

SAVED FROM THE WHIRLPOOL.

The writer of these lines lingers with especial fondness over the results achieved at those suburban "Homes"—sweetest of all words in the English tongue—which are situated in his own parish of Hampstead. Therein are hundreds of boys and girls, admirably housed, protected and trained to the untold advantage not alone of themselves, but of the State. Surely, apart from the practical side of the question, a deeply pathetic and instructive lesson is afforded by their presence to all thoughtful onlookers. Just consider what might have become of any of those units of creation if he or she had been drawn into that awful whirlpool of misery which, so dark and foul, surges and bubbles over in its eager quest after the young. Poisoned by pernicious influences and surroundings, how easy to have been sucked under and lost, perchance for ever! Snatched from such peril, it is impossible to regard them otherwise than as children of grace attracted to us through the circumstances of their positions, by an indefinable charm of interest and solicitude. As we hear the "tramp, tramp, tramp" of the boy battalions marching up Hillfield Road, or watch the brave show of dainty maidens demurely passing into their "Home" at historic Church Row, the hearts of all true men must be touched by the knowledge of the dangers escaped, and the blessed deliverance which has been vouchsafed. Rescued? Yes, mark well, in the face of difficulties it is hard to describe, which, fortunately, you can scarcely realize.

SHAPING YOUNG LIVES.

Is there not something grandly impressive in the contemplation of this small army of recruits, who are no longer outcasts, but privileged to commingle beneath the sheltering wings of their many compassionate foster-parents—willing to accept the sacred trust of shaping the young lives after righteousness, equipping them for a sturdy defiance of this world's sinful snares which are so craftily and so attractively set for their entanglement? Who shall measure the vastness of the benefits disseminated throughout the land by means of this wise and kindly guardianship, or plumb the depths of gratitude which must be aroused in those remodelled natures as they compare the past and the present state.

All honour, then, to those good Christians who have striven, and are striving now, to save these precious souls alive through the various excellent schemes employed by this famous charity, and hall-marked with the appreciation of a sympathetic, discriminating public, which never forsakes an old and tried friend such as this. Indeed, it must be so fully recognised that the work of the class undertaken by the Field Lane Institutions must not be allowed to stand still, that just a whisper that a little extra pecuniary support in these hard times will be most welcome (as indeed it is most needed) must receive a response at once spontaneous and liberal. And this hint applies also to the Christmas dinner, and relief of distress fund, to which many poor creatures look forward so keenly every year. That zealous, indefatigable secretary, Mr. Peregrine Platt, will, you may be sure, be delighted to furnish all particulars from the office at Vine Street, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.

CECIL CLARKE.

The Moravian Missions.

THIS Society has nearly 200 centres of work, and a home church membership of 30,000. Its devoted agents labour in difficult fields, many of them on the confines of civilization. They toil among the Eskimos of Labrador and Alaska, the Indians of North and Central America, the coloured population of the West Indies, the natives of Nyassa Land, the aborigines of Australia, and the Tibetan-speaking Buddhists of the Himalayas. The financial responsibilities of these undertakings are largely borne by the "London Association in Aid of Moravian Missions," which, founded in 1817, has sent nearly £100,000 to the work.

AN OBJECT-LESSON.

"A Sunday in Jamaica (writes a visitor to the Mission in that island) I consider an object-lesson in the working of the Moravian system at its best. At nine o'clock a children's meeting begins the exercises of the day, and consists of singing, Bible exposition, and prayer. Here there seems no difficulty in getting the children—and children swarm in these sturdy homes. At ten o'clock is the Sabbath school. It is an institution for the whole congregation, and is well attended by all classes. The method of classes and instruction is little different from that in our home congregations. Then follows the regular service at eleven o'clock. Both at Bethabara and Fairfield this occasion was a most interesting one, as it showed a Jamaica congregation at its best. A significant feature was the very large number of children and young people, the former sitting together on the galleries under the care of a helper, and the majority well provided with hymn-books and Bibles. Certainly the charge of illiteracy, which is brought against the Jamaica population as a whole, does not apply to our Moravian congregations, for in those I visited and saw intimately, there was every evidence of fair education."

In connection with the Labrador Mission, a steam vessel has been purchased. A characteristic report of an evangelist travelling among the Eskimos, says, "I found the people very anxious to hear the Word preached, and they paid great attention to all I said to them. Many are, I believe, desirous to live Christian lives. True, the majority are able to read, and nearly all possess at least the Eskimo New Testament, but they need also to be taught, and to have the truths brought before their minds. They were very anxious to know when we would establish a mission station among them."

The missionaries who labour among the Indians located on the Reservations in Southern California require much love, much patience, much faith, zeal, and tact. The work of evangelizing, instructing, and uplifting this people is no easy task, as there are many hindrances arising from their circumstances and condition, as well as from the climate in which they live. As wards of the Government, they have been accustomed to have most of the necessaries of life provided for them without care and trouble on their part, a condition of things which fosters a spirit of carelessness and indolence. The influence of the Roman Catholic priests encourages superstition and dead formality, an illustration of which was given lately by the to please the relatives, in order that it might be interred in a Roman Catholic burying ground.

Much might be said of the South African work, of Surinam, and of Tibet. Describing the last-mentioned country, a friend in another organization writes:—"The Moravians are doing a quiet and telling work among the Ladakis. The best native Christian that I have seen was a Christian boy who was sent to us from Leh for three years. He was to have been a Buddhist priest. On leaving me to return to his land, after having lived a plucky and consistent Christian life in school and out of school, he said, 'Sahib, I don't want popularity, power, or wealth; but what I do want is to go back to my people to preach Jesus Christ and his saving power.'"

The General Fund needs largely increased regular help if existing missions are to be maintained, and the Medical Missionary (Endowment) Fund is still £10,000 short of the needed sum.

For the Leper Home, Jerusalem, £500 is required to provide a new and greater water supply, which has become indispensable, owing to large increase in patients. Support is also needed for the tried mission on the Moskito Coast, threatened, as it is, with extinction by the introduction and enforcement of unjust laws, and seeking prayerful sympathy; and also for Labrador, hitherto self-supporting, but suddenly crippled in its resources.

The secretary of the London Association is Rev. W. Wetton Cox, 7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

Homes for the Aged Poor.

THIRTY-TWO years ago the first Home for the Aged Poor was opened through the exertions of a lady much interested in those whom misfortune had brought to poverty in the closing years of life. Being past work is too often the sole reason for the pitiful and well-nigh hopeless combination of age and poverty, and many have to seek the refuge of the workhouse, whose closing years after a life of honest industry should be spent at least in quiet and comfort.

Fifteen homes are now open in London and the suburbs, being occupied by 173 inmates, showing how the little seed sown by loving hands has grown and prospered. It is impossible to estimate the amount of good done during these thirty-two years. No less than 573 persons have been sheltered in these hospitable homes, whose object is to provide a room, rent free, for the aged poor of both sexes, who are sixty years of age and upwards, and who have a small income.

Coal is provided during the winter months, extra help is given in time of sickness, and the service of a nurse has frequently to be secured. For these purposes separate funds have been started. Perhaps no better proof of the value of the Homes can be given than the remarkable fact that during the last three months death has removed three aged ones from the same house—A. G. was eighty-eight years of age, and had lived twenty-three years in the same room; S. K., the next to follow, was eighty-one, and had been an inmate fourteen years and a half; while C.H., eighty-six and a half years old, had been in residence no less than twenty years. All three we have reason to believe were pilgrims journeying to the better home beyond, and while they are sorely missed in the earthly home, we rejoice to think that their so many years of age and weakness were soothed by loving care. About forty applicants are anxiously waiting for admission.

1,570 of the Lord's aged poor, of both sexes, and members of various branches of the Church of Christ, are now on the books; and upwards of £12,000 per annum are distributed in life pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas. To meet this amount the income is inadequate. The pensioners live in all parts of the country, and most of them are upwards of seventy years of age.

In the four homes—Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Brighton, and Stamford Hill—180 of the pensioners have peaceful and happy abodes. A visit to these buildings is invited.

Fresh Contributions to the Society and Asylums are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received at the Office of the Society or of The Christian.

SUNDAY, December 15. James ii.

TO despise the poor is still a temptation to a worldly Church, or one which is conducted on the principles of worldly success. But the poor are specially dear to God, if their poverty has taught them their weakness, need, and necessary dependence on Him. They may be rich in faith and heirs of the heavenly kingdom. Who that has had to deal with a large parish or congregation, where the extremes of rank met, has not discovered this? Excelling beauty and nobility of character are as often found among the poor as among the rich, and if the whole Church of God were taken into account, it would be found that, while it contains many of the élite of the world, yet the preponderance of its membership is contributed by the poor. There are great compensations. Let us beware of this partiality, which disfigures the beautiful name by which we are called—the name of Christ.

To break the law of love is to violate the whole Decalogue. In legal tribunals, it is not necessary for the criminal to be proved to have violated all the laws of the statute book to ensure his condemnation. If he commit one act of murder or treason, he suffers the extreme penalty; and he could not suffer more if he were brought in as guilty of breaking all.

It is not enough to hold a creed, or to believe about Christ, or to give in a general assent to Christian doctrine; there must be a personal trust in the personal Saviour. The demons are orthodox, but they are demons still. True faith in Jesus reveals itself in the consistency of our obedience to the royal law of love to God, and to man for God's sake.

MONDAY, December 16. James iii.

Nothing is so great a test as our speech; and it would seem that there is no part of our conduct concerning which the majority of Christians are so absolutely unguarded. What the bridle is to the horse, that the fear of God should be to us; and as the whole course of the horse is governed by the one, so our course will be determined by the other. If your tongue be ungovernable, put it as a helm or rudder into the hand of the great Pilot, that the impulse of the blessed Christ, our Steersman, may guide us whither He will.

Ask that your tongue may be set on fire from heaven, as Isaiah's was, when the live coal touched his lips, and then go through the world kindling as much combustible material as you can find. Ask Christ to tame it. Ask that out of it may come only blessing.

Notice how the Apostle extols the true wisdom. He says it is meek—"the meekness of wisdom"—and that it comes from above. He reminds us that it is first pure, then peaceable, and adds many lovely traits. All this makes us feel that it is not intellectual, but moral and spiritual, that holiness gives an insight into the essence of things, that the eyes of the heart must be opened before we can really know. We are reminded of the words of the Apostle Paul: "We speak wisdom to them that are perfect, but not the wisdom of this world . . . but the wisdom of God in a mystery." These things are hidden from the wise and prudent, but revealed to babes. Oh to be made thus wise unto salvation!

TUESDAY, December 17. James iv.

How true it is that the fighting and warring of the world emanate from greed—greed of land, of money, of pre-eminence. Every one of us is powerfully tempted to slave for the indulgence of his own pleasures; and before God can make anything of us we must come to the point of definitely deciding that his will, service, and glory, shall always have the first and chief place with us. Ah, how much sorrow and indecision would be spared us if we stood by that resolve!

If our desires strive for gratification, there is another spirit, the Spirit of God, which He hath graciously put within us, who strives also, and longs unto bitter envying (5) He longs to possess; to have full and undivided mastery; to fulfil the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power. Let us choose for Him. Let us resist the devil, and yield ourselves to God. Let us draw nigh to God with eager desire. Let us humble ourselves beneath his mighty hand.

The Apostle reiterates his warning against evil speaking. We cannot speak evil of another without constituting ourselves his judge. And there is only one Judge, as there is only one Law-giver. Our province, therefore, is to hand over every doubtful cause to Him. He will repay.

How transitory is life! We know not what the morrow may bring forth. Life is as a meteor, which flashes for a moment in the atmosphere, and is gone. As we look back on the years, they are as a tale told by the camp fires at night, or as a dream. It is best for us to live in God's will. To do so will be to extract the greatest sweetness out of our days, and to entrust them with the rarest grain for future harvesting. Keep your hand on the golden railing of God's will, whether you ascend or descend the staircase of life.

WEDNESDAY, December 18. James v.

There is much of the style of the ancient prophet in these words of James, as he gives so terrific a denunciation of the wealthy oppressors of the pious poor. Instead of using their money for the service of God, and helping others, they had laid it up with covetous greed, until their gold and silver had been rusted through. What a solemn question it is for any readers of these words to whom God has given substance, as to whether their money is bright with use or rusted with lying in disuse! How often, too, the hoards of wealth which men store bring a curse to their successors! In the fifth verse James compares the people whom he addresses to fatted animals feeding greedily, the very day on which they are to be slaughtered.

In the next paragraph he encourages his suffering brethren by the assurance of our Lord's speedy advent, which would come as certainly as springtime or harvest. The coming of the Lord was very near in the approaching fall of Jerusalem, but He is always "at hand;" and the weary heart may at any moment turn to Him for comfort; the oppressed heart may turn to Him for vindication. Behold! He standeth at the door! The hard lot of the righteous has an end. As it was with Job, so it will be with you. Wait for "the end of the Lord." The Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

We judge that it was the custom of the early Church to look on sickness as God's chastisement for sin, and that the first step towards recovery was to search out the sin, confess it, and put it away. This is not always so. Let us not strive rebelliously and proudly against the chastening rod, but learn the lesson, and call in the prayers of God's children. The "energetic prayer of a righteous man has much power." O men of God, get to your Carmel and pray for rain!

THURSDAY, December 19. 1 Peter i.

This Epistle seems to have been written from Babylon (chap. v. 13). There is no evidence that Babylon means Rome. It was probably written about 63 or 64, and addressed to the Christians who resided in the different provinces of Asia Minor, which are named from the most easterly, and therefore nearest to Babylon, and ending with the borders of the Mediterranean. Evidently the whole district had been swept by the storms of persecution, the stormy petrels heralding the more terrible persecutions which were to desolate the Church to the fall of Rome (chap. iii., 7; iv. 12-19).

The Apostle draws from his own experience the words of comfort and exhortation which he gives to his suffering fellow believers. A quick eye can detect many references to his own fall and restoration. "Out of the eater came sweetness." We are set apart by the Holy Spirit that we may obey, and that we may walk in fellowship with God through the daily sprinkling of the blood of Jesus. You show that you are elect when you obey.

In the midst of our sorrows, let us count our mercies. We have a living hope, springing immortal from the open grave of Jesus; before us is an inheritance which can never lose the bloom and freshness of its joy; it is reserved for us as we for it, and it waits to be revealed. The clue to our trials is the pricelessness of our faith to God. It is his fine gold. Besides, our Lord has passed this way before us; for Christ and Christians there is one lot—present suffering, final glory. Gospel ministers, prophets, and angels, bear witness to this (11, 12).

Let us love. Love is the atmosphere of our Father's Home. For love we have been redeemed by precious blood. Love purifies the soul, and endures when the breath of the final autumn has passed over the glory of man. Love one another with a pure heart, fervently.

FRIDAY, December 20. 1 Peter ii.

It is easy to lay aside malice, guile, and evil-speakings when we are constantly feeding on the unadulterated milk of spiritual truth. Have you tasted that the Lord is gracious? Surely you will have no taste for what grieves Him. Drink, O beloved, yea, eat and drink abundantly, that ye may grow, casting aside sinful and childish things.

The changing imagery of the next paragraph (4-10) is remarkable. A living stone lies before us, and as we touch Him we live; and other souls together with us are built up, and the structure grows into a temple. Then we become a holy priesthood in the temple itself, and provide in ourselves the spiritual sacrifices which are accepted; and from out of our union with Christ we behold the fate of those who refuse Him. Finally, we realize all that God said of his ancient people to be true of us (cf. v. 9 and Ex. xix. 6). Thus from the Church, as a temple, songs of praise are ever ascending to Him who called us into his light.

It is as important to-day as ever to maintain the pilgrim life, especially watching against the evil desires of our selfish nature, which, like armed foes, attack the higher powers, and bring them under their destructive influence. Let us be specially careful of our relations to those who are without, and with whom we come in contact in the State and social life, that they may judge well of Christ by what they see in us.

Especially let servants realize that they have been placed in ungodly homes as witnesses to the beauty of their Lord's character, in whose daily steps they are called to follow. The way of the Cross is the way for us all.

SATURDAY, December 21. 1 Peter iii.

In the previous chapter the Apostle had been urging the poor slaves of the wealthy households of the time to submit quietly to wrong-doing, leaving God to vindicate; and now he turns to the wives of unbelieving husbands, showing them that their chaste behaviour, their meek and quiet spirit, their holy subjection, were the greatest arguments for the truth of their religion. What we are is more important than what we say. And if we are careful of the hidden man of the heart, there will be no doubt as to the consistency and influence of the life.

The same temper becomes us all. Let us compassionate others' faults, even when they may cut and hurt us, repaying evil with good, reviling with blessing, for in doing this we shall see good days, and live under the eye and near the ear of God (v. 12).

Notice the R.V. v. 15, "Sanctify Christ as Lord." Put Him on the throne. Let all the powers of the life stand as in his court, receiving the bidding of the King. To do this will inevitably bring you into collision with the ungodly, but even then we shall carry a good conscience. Remember you must live with yourself. A good conscience is the best bedfellow. Keep a good conscience (16-21). It is out of the shame, sorrow, and anguish of the suffering which the world inflicts, that we achieve the greatest results. So the sufferings of Huss and Jerome did more to emancipate the benighted souls of men than even the widest proclamation of the truth from their living lips.

Other Lands.

The Waldensian Church.*

Its Early History.

THE community known as the Waldensian or Vaudois Church, is beyond question the oldest Protestant Church in existence. It dates from Peter Waldo, or Valdo, a rich merchant of Lyons, in the latter half of the twelfth century. Under the impression produced by the sudden death of one of his friends, and after consulting a Canon of the Church, who quoted to him the Saviour's words, "If thou wouldest be perfect, go, sell that thou hast, and give to the poor," Valdo took a vow of poverty. He had, however, no thought of separating from the Church of Rome either on this occasion or when, subsequently, he spent some of his money in having the Bible translated from the Latin Vulgate into the common tongue. Little by little the contrast between the worldliness and greed of the Church, as it then was, and the precepts of the Master became only too manifest.

Waldo's conversion was in 1173; six years later two of the disciples, whom he had gathered round him, went to Rome in order to appeal to Pope Alexander III. from the Archbishop of Lyons, who had forbidden them to preach the Gospel. The third Lateran Council was then in progress, and amongst its members was a Welsh ecclesiastic named Walker Map, who has left on record how he exposed these rustics to the laughter of the Council, by means of a sort of mediæval pons asinorum, with the result that their appeal was contemptuously dismissed. But the Poor of Lyons, as they were called, felt that they must obey God rather than men; they continued to preach, were excommunicated by the archbishop, and escaping from Lyons "went everywhere preaching the Word." How some of them, or of their immediate followers, came to settle in the Vaudois Valleys is a point that history, as distinguished from legend, has not yet cleared up.

THE VALLEYS AND THE PREACHERS.

These valleys presented two great advantages; they are partly in France and partly in Piedmont; they are united by numerous passes, difficult of access to others than the hardy mountaineers who inhabit them, but to these presenting no serious difficulty. When one has lost one's way, as was my recent experience in attempting to cross, with my brother, what seemed an easy mountain pass, one appreciates better the difficulties that met the would-be persecutors in the days of the Inquisition. Sheltered in this way, notwithstanding numerous edicts of persecution, the Vaudois valleys became the headquarters of a movement which had its ramifications in distant Calabria and Picardy and Bohemia. How their travelling preachers travelled from land to land in the guise of hawkers, visiting peasant's hut and lordly manor, and everywhere carrying the precious seed of the Gospel, has been told by Whittier in his poem, "The Vaudois Teacher," based upon the testimony of a Papal inquisitor.

O lady fair, I have yet a gem which a purer lustre flings
Than the diamond flash of the jewelled crown on the lofty brow of kings—
A wonderful pearl of exceeding price, whose virtue shall not decay,
Whose light shall be as a spell to thee, and a blessing on thy way.

Only the jewel referred to was not, as Whittier supposed, the written Scripture—that was alike too costly and too dangerous a treasure to be carried about by the Vaudois missionaries. It was, as the text of the inquisitor of Passau—quoted by Professor Comba—clearly shows, the Scripture passages learnt by heart: the writer tells that, amongst the Vaudois, both men and women could, with rare exception, repeat large portions of the New Testament by heart.

THREATENED EXTERMINATION.

How this propaganda aroused the Papal court to fury can easily be understood. Again and again were expeditions set on foot, now on the French, now on the Italian side of the Alps, and the Vaudois history is full of harrowing tales of massacre and outrage. But these humble communities survived until the Reformation, when they gladly united with the Swiss and French reformers, and thenceforth enjoyed the moral and material support of their Protestant brethren in other lands. Oliver Cromwell interfered to save them, as is well known; and his secretary, Milton, wrote on their behalf the noble sonnet "On the Late Massacre in Piedmont."

Their narrowest and most wonderful escape from extermination was in 1686, when Louis XIV., of France, having, as he supposed, rooted out Protestantism from his own territories, brought such pressure to bear on the Duke of Savoy that the latter reluctantly ordered his troops, together with those of France, to destroy his faithful subjects. This object was apparently accomplished, less by force than by fraud; thousands were thrown into prison, and hundreds slain, and the army was withdrawn. But the few scattered refugees left among the mountains and forests gathered together, and made themselves so terrible to the surrounding Catholic populations that the Duke granted to them and to their brethren confined in the prisons of Piedmont permission to retire peacefully into Switzerland.

Three years later, in 1689, they made their "Glorious Return" (La Glorieuse Rentrée), marching across the snow-clad and precipitous mountains, beating down all opposition, and establishing themselves in the almost impregnable natural fortress of Balsiglia for the winter. In the course of the following spring, Louis XIV. quarrelled with the Duke of Savoy, who was only too glad to obtain the help of his Vaudois subjects. He was sheltered for a time amongst them, and in return he accorded them a certain amount of tolerance. At length, in 1848, the disabilities which had attached to them ever since the days of persecution, except during the brief interval of the French Revolution, were swept away by Charles Albert, King of Sardinia, the founder of modern Italian liberties. Since then they have, in large measure, fulfilled the prayer of Milton:—

Their martyred blood and ashes sow
O'er all the Italian fields, where still doth sway
The triple tyrant; that from these may grow
A hundredfold, who having learned Thy way
Early may fly the Babylonian woe.

Its Present Condition.

At the present time the Vaudois Church numbers about 20,000 members, of whom somewhat more than half reside in the ancestral valleys, whilst the remainder are scattered over the Italian peninsula, and include many converts won from Romanism. They have established colonies in the Argentine Republic and Uruguay, where their missionary activity has led to the conversion of many of the Spanish-speaking population.

My brother and I lately spent three weeks in these deeply interesting valleys, and had meetings in all the sixteen parishes, except two. The Vaudois keep to the French language for their religious services; this practice goes back to a visitation of plague in the seventeenth century, when all the Italian pastors died, and it was needful to send for pastors from Switzerland who only knew French. They learn Italian alongside of French, and are thus a bilingual people, a fact which brings them many advantages.

As regards their religious life, the past century has seen a remarkable change. The venerable Professor Tron, now eighty years of age, told us that when he was a boy they had not one pastor who preached the simple Gospel of salvation through Christ, so terribly had the canker of Rationalism eaten into their Church life. Now there is not one pastor who does not preach it.

In 1825, Felix Neff, the Apostle of the Alps, who did so great a work in reviving spiritual, evangelical religion in the valleys on the French side, paid a visit of a few days to those of Piedmont. This was the beginning of a movement which went on permeating the Vaudois Church till it was completely transformed. But the flocks are not yet on a level with their leaders. Some of the pastors find it hard to make any deep impression on their people, who, though proud of and attached to their fathers' religion, are many of them strangers to their fathers' God, and content with a merely traditional faith. Still, there are not a few bright Christians.

Many of the Vaudois churches would endorse what the last annual report says of one of them:—

We are still far from being a Church which is in an ideal condition; yet there are not a few living witnesses to the efficacy of Divine grace. All who desire to obtain salvation can find, in their family or amongst their immediate surroundings, brethren and sisters able to lend them a helping hand.

Many earnest prayers are going up for a fresh revival amongst them, which shall fit them more fully for the great work that is evidently reserved for this ancient evangelical church, placed on the confines of two great Roman Catholic nations, and possessing the languages of both. Let us join in these prayers, specially remembering the young in the schools and colleges, most of them built by the help of British Christians in the past two generations.

JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER.

Miss Leigh's Paris Homes.

SINCE the opening of the British and American Mission Homes in Paris, founded in 1872 by Miss Ada Leigh, they have received over 11,000 young women, besides befriending many others. The institutions are open to all English-speaking girls of every class of life, and comprise a home for daily and unemployed governesses, young women employed in business and working out by the day, maids seeking situations, a sanatorium, free registry, governess and students' institute, an orphanage for destitute children, night schools, mission services for the poor, and other branches of religious and philanthropic effort.

This comprehensive and unique work, now known as the British and American Mission Homes and Christian Associations in Paris, is entirely unendowed, and at the present time requires to widen the circle of its friends, so greatly thinned by death. At some of the centres, last year was one of the busiest in the annals of the institutions, owing to the extra work entailed by the Exhibition. The ordinary life at the Mission Home, Avenue de Wagram, was in no way interfered with. Young people were met at Railway stations and accompanied safely through Paris. A systematic meeting of boat trains was arranged, and was undertaken by a lady from Washington House. All the British and American stalls in the Exhibition were visited for the purpose of helping any girls who might need assistance. Many living in Paris make the Home a rallying-place on Sunday afternoons, when Bible classes are held, and the workers have the joy of offering cheerful counsel and encouragement to those needing sympathy and help.

Notwithstanding the numerous difficulties which have encircled the work at Washington House, Rue de Milan, the efforts made in the spiritual and temporal interests of young women have borne much fruit. Mrs. Crichton Ginsburg, who is in charge, is often encouraged by the frequent expressions of gratitude of the young people under her care.

At the Children's Home and Orphanage the work has progressed satisfactorily. Although £1,000 is needed annually for its support, for the fourth time the financial year closed with the work free of debt.

The loving toil, year by year, of the ladies who devote themselves to the work, with a self-forgetfulness which touches the hearts of the many friendless young women they seek to win, finds its fruit in hundreds of lives made glad, and fitted for high and noble service. The address of Miss Leigh (Mrs. Travers Lewis) is 77, Avenue Wagram, Paris.

Triumphs in Uganda.

PREACHING in the Cathedral Church, Liverpool, a few days ago, Bishop Tucker told the wonderful story of missionary triumphs in Uganda. Twenty years ago that country was one of the dark places of the earth, the very habitation of cruelty. Blood flowed like water. It was no uncommon thing for the King, when a fit of ferocity seized him, to issue an order that every man, woman, and child found on the roads of the capital at a certain hour should be put to death; and in a brief space hundreds of wretched creatures would fall into the executioners' hands, and be hurried into eternity. Besides these murderous attacks, captives were seized and sold to the slave-dealers—a man or a woman for an old gun or musket, and boys and girls for 100 guncaps each, or a cupful of powder. Then followed the weary march to the coast 1,000 miles away, during which two-thirds of the victims often perished. And the survivors were doomed to the sad fate of slavery in the plantations of Pemba and Zanzibar. Well might Livingstone pray for Heaven's blessing upon any man, Christian or Mohammedan, who might do something for the healing of the open sore of the world.

The Bishop claimed for Christianity that in Uganda "the open sore of the world" has been healed. Eight years ago the native chiefs consulted the Bishop on the question of slavery. He declared unto them the teaching and spirit of the Gospel in relation to it, with the result that they brought to him a paper signed by forty of the great chiefs, headed by the present Prime Minister of Uganda, in which they declared their decision to abolish slavery.

THE BLOOD OF THE MARTYRS.

Eleven years ago Bishop Tucker, as he now recalled, went to Uganda to carry on the work begun by Bishops Hannington and Parker. The blood of the martyrs in Uganda had been the seed of the Church. Pioneers in the mission field, many of them native converts, suffered terrible persecution. Some were hacked limb from limb, and others cast into the flames or roasted to death ever slow fires. But he had never heard of one who saved his life by renouncing his Christian faith. Ten years ago there were only 300 baptized Christians. To-day there are 30,000. Then there were only twenty native evangelists, now there are 2,000 Christians of Uganda engaged in spreading the truth. There are to-day scattered throughout the country, 700 churches; ten years ago there was but one. Out of 10,000 communicants, one in five is a church worker.

Bishop Tucker described a scene which will linger long in his memory. Before he left Uganda he preached in a large church, in which were gathered between 4,000 and 5,000 souls. The earnest responses of that great congregation came like the roll of distant thunder. And when the text was announced there was a flutter of book pages like the rustling of the leaves of the forest. Among the 500 communicants who remained to the Lord's Supper, were living witnesses of the unspeakable cruelties of other days—evidences of the work of the devil. One man was unable to grasp the cup, for only stumps of arms were left to him. Here were the blind, and men without lips, and without ears; who had been mutilated in the days of cruelty. How true it was in Uganda that the Son of God had been "manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil."

A MISSIONARY CHURCH.

The work of the church was not confined to Uganda. The converts were characterized by a remarkable earnestness, that led them to carry the Gospel to those who had not heard it. Native missionaries had even penetrated to the confines of Stanley's dark forest. Some of the pigmies whom Stanley discovered are under instruction, and one had been baptized, so that ere long he hoped they would have pigmy evangelists at work amid the forests of the interior.

The question was asked concerning the native converts, "Will they stand?" He believed their faith would be as enduring as it had proved steadfast in the case of those who had died rather than deny their Master. He had recently received a letter from some chiefs, who said, "We have met an enemy in the way." The enemy was an Englishman who sought to persuade them to drink English spirits, and said they did not know what was good when they refused! That Englishman was doing the devil's work, but, said the Christian chiefs, "Let us pray for the Englishman."

In conclusion, Bishop Tucker pointed out two lessons to be learnt from the success of the work in Uganda. The first was, that God's blessing comes where the Gospel that reveals it comes. The proclamation of a full and free salvation, the purchase of Christ's blood, the gift of his grace, were always accompanied by God's blessing. And the second lesson was the inestimable value and power of intercessory prayer. If there has been one branch of mission work that has been steeped in prayer, it has been the mission in Uganda. God invited them to put Him to the test, and the very windows of heaven would be opened to them.

Leaving for the Congo.

AN affectionate farewell was said on Wednesday of last week by friends of the Congo Balolo Mission to a party of missionaries who were about to leave for the field. In the afternoon an interesting review of the circumstances of the gathering was given by Mr. E. A. Talbot (secretary).

There are, he said, now five stations in Balololand, and building operations for a new station on the Bolombo (another of the great unevangelized tributaries of the Congo) will shortly be commenced. As it has been proved to be an imperative necessity for every missionary to come home after three years' service, not more than two-thirds of the workers can be in the field at any one time. At present a larger number than usual are at home, and the need for reinforcements on the field is very urgent, so that the Mission is grateful to God and to his stewards for supplying the means to enable the workers to go forward.

Two of them, Mr. B. J. Lower and Mr. G. S. Jeffrey, are tried and proved workers, who have hazarded their lives for the sake of the Name. Mrs. Jeffrey has been for four years engaged in mission work in one of the large manufacturing districts in the Midlands—after a course of training at Doric Lodge—in which she has been used of God to lead many to Christ. Mr. and Mrs. Jeffrey have been appointed to take up the work at Bongandanga on the home-coming of Mr. and Mrs. Ruskin, who are due in England in the spring.

Mr. A. J. Bowen's second period of service has been specially spent in translation work, he having completed the Acts of the Apostles, and other portions of the Word of God which are now being printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Rev. Joseph Clark, who has for over twenty years laboured in Congoland, was one of the original band who went out from Harley House to the Congo, to found the Livingstone Inland Mission in the great cataract region.

STEAMER "LIVINGSTONE" NOW PAID FOR.

The Livingstone steamer is now packed up, and in the course of a very short time will be shipped to Central Africa. With profound thanksgiving to God and his servants, it is announced that the money necessary for the completion and transport of this vessel has been given or promised; but there are large prospective needs. In particular, a slipway is wanted, on which the mission vessels may be overhauled twice a year.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. W. H. Seagram referred in touching terms to the anxieties under which the work had been carried through during the illness and absence of Dr. Harry Guinness; at the same time sounding a clear note of encouragement on account of the progress which had been made during the year.

When telling the story of the work of the Lord as she had seen it on the Congo, Miss Cork rejoiced in signs of an awakening among the people which recently manifested itself at her station, Lulanga. The work among women and children she had found very hard. Describing her methods, she said her opportunities for speaking of Christ generally arose by going out and in among them while they were engaged in their daily occupations, and telling over and over again in simple words the Gospel story. The great hope lies in the school work among the children. The young minds are trained by education to receive and understand the truth of God. While many are dull, yet the teachers continually meet with particularly bright boys and girls, whose reading is principally in the Gospels. Such children continue reading the Word of God among their own people afterwards. When the boys go to labour on the trading steamers, their influence among their companions has been shown to be often of the most satisfactory nature. "I am quite sure that in the day when we meet around God's throne there will be many with us of whom we had little idea."

THE JOY OF SERVICE.

Voicing the feelings of all, Mr. G. S. Jeffrey testified to the joy they felt at going back to the much-loved work. One source of deep satisfaction lies in the scattering of the Word of God, by means of the children who go back to their own people carrying the Gospels with them. Having for the past four years been chiefly engaged in exploration work on the Juapa River, Mr. Jeffrey spoke with deep feeling of the dense moral darkness in which the heathen of the region live. A trader had assured them they must have soldiers and guns, for protection when going among the people, but they went forward trusting in God, and received a welcome as "the white men of God who are different from the white men of the rubber." Settling among degraded cannibals, they were compelled to leave because they were on a trading concession.

The cause of the women was earnestly pleaded again by Mrs. J. H. Harris (of the Ikau station), who showed their condition to be in every sense one of slavery to their husbands, the social system being permeated throughout with immorality. But among the younger girls she had seen much progress made in education, with promise of future spiritual ingathering.

BIBLE TRANSLATION.

Attention was directed to the linguistic difficulties met with in the course of the work by Mr. A. J. Bowen, who is anticipating a fourth term of service. On his arrival at Bongandanga nearly three years ago, he went out to a village and asked the chief to let him have a house. Settling thus among the natives, he saw the Word of God proving its own power. Gathering a vocabulary, word by word, had been a laborious process, but much progress had been made. In addition to the progress made in the giving of the Scriptures to the people in their own tongue, as well as in the preparation of grammars, dictionaries, &c., a number of hymns have been brought into common use.

A searching word to "those who send forth missionaries" was spoken by Principal Forbes Jackson. Comparing such as go forth to miners in a pit, he said those who let them down must send also the pure air of faith and prayer which will keep them alive and well. When the Lord makes up the sum total, He will think as much of those who are at the top doing their duty as of those who go down. Some at home are choking with an excess of the Water of Life, and would be benefited much by sending it to others.

A second meeting was held in the evening, under the presidency of Lord Kinnaird. Addresses were given by Mrs. Jeffrey, Messrs. W. Ellis, J. H. Harris, B. J. Lower, Rev. Joseph Clark, and Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Christ and the Sinner.

Jesus never answered nay,
When a sinner sought his aid;
Jesus never turned away
When request to Him was made.
No! each weary, needy one
Found a Friend in God's dear Son.

French Village Movement.

A VERY interesting movement towards Protestantism is at present going on in the hamlet of Madranges, lying in the department of La Corrèze, Central France, where about 400 persons have already left the Church of Rome. The remarkable feature of this change is that it has been entirely brought about by the treatment to which the people were subjected by the clergy of the diocese.

A CAUSE OF DISCONTENT.

The inhabitants of Madranges are all peasants, living upon the produce of their fields and their flocks. They are earnest and God-fearing; zealous in all the duties of religion. They were, however, subjected to great obstacles in fulfilling these. Being only a hamlet in the parish of Lonsac, there had been no resident priest for more than a century. The curé of the parish was expected to say mass once a fortnight, and to perform necessary burial, marriage, or baptismal services, but found these duties too onerous, and insisted that the people must come to Lonsac for the services of the Church. He insisted, too, that the children should come to him to be taught the catechism, fixing the hour of 7 a.m. for them to be with him, and if they arrived late he made them kneel on the stone floor of the church with their arms stretched out as on the cross. Yet so anxious were the mothers that their children should have religious teaching, that they roused the little ones at four o'clock, and sent them forth, in summer heat and winter cold, to trudge the five miles which the priest found too long for his powers. Many of the children fell ill from fatigue and exposure —one little girl died. Then the fathers interfered, and said their children should not go to Lonsac.

The curé continued perfectly indifferent, and grew more and more negligent. The mothers, in despair, addressed a letter to the bishop, recounting the difficulties of their position. To their earnest appeal the bishop returned a somewhat stern refusal, and an admonition to be content with the existing arrangements. The curé, meanwhile, had entirely ceased to serve in the church of Madranges; so the people endeavoured to hold some sort of service by themselves. The sacristan had bought a Bible, which he studied carefully and with great delight. He read to the assembled people from it the passages appointed for certain festivals, also certain prayers from the breviary, and they sang hymns. Thus they celebrated Christmas Day, 1897, and for some months struggled on. The sacristan instructed the children in the catechism, but the bishop refused to admit them to the communion.

TURNING TO THE PROTESTANTS.

Then the loyalty of the poor people gave away. "Let us turn to the Protestants," they cried; "let us ask them to come and teach us." One hundred and fifty fathers of families, representing 500 souls, addressed to the Société Evangélique de France a request that a teacher might be sent to instruct them. The nearest agent of the Society was stationed at Brive, some nine hours' journey away; but he at once responded to the call, and met with an enthusiastic welcome. Hundreds came to meet him, the church bells were rung, guns fired, and messengers sent to all the surrounding hamlets to announce that the Protestant teacher had arrived, and was going to give them an address. The church could not hold the numbers that assembled; they gathered under a large chestnut tree in the centre of the village, and there M. Fallourd spoke to them from John iii. 16. To his words they listened with such intense attention and delight that the speaker himself was deeply moved. "One could speak for hours to such hearers," he said, "and never feel fatigue."

It required some months to make the necessary arrangements for supplying these newly-gathered sheep with a shepherd, and during those months M. Fallourd, with occasional help, carried on the double duty of his own church at Brive and the training and teaching of these earnest but very ignorant peasants.

Two years have elapsed since the first appeal reached the Société Evangélique, and the infant church has remained steadfast in the faith, growing in grace.

Pastors and evangelists have laboured there during the last year; with the result that at the present moment the Gospel is, more or less, regularly taught in thirty different localities in the Corrèze. "And this the Society has done with very limited means, and with the constant dread of a deficit before it. We have spoken of thirty villages which have been opened to Protestantism. How many more might be instructed in the same Gospel as has been preached in Madranges!"

Industrial Missions for East Africa.

DURING his visit to England the Bishop of Mombasa has taken advantage of every opportunity for furthering the cause of missions. The directors of the Industrial Missions Aid Society have been considering proposals made by him, touching the initiation of industrial work at Frere Town. In a recent communication, the Bishop writes:—

"The scheme, which has the cordial approval of the Church Missionary Society, embraces the establishment of brick and tile works, carpentry, boat-building, and the manufacture of cocoanut oil. From minute inquiries made by myself and others in Mombasa and Frere Town, there can be no doubt that there is a splendid opening for such industries. I am satisfied that they would prove a real blessing to the too-long-neglected Africa, which is now in danger, so far as concerns East Africa, of being set on one side by the enterprising Hindus. They would also be of great assistance to the missionary, who would be able to find employment for his adherents. If wisely managed, such an enterprise would ultimately become a financial success, and so materially assist in strengthening missionary enterprise in East Africa. There is an immediate scope for building operations, inasmuch as it is proposed to erect a memorial church and other buildings. These works may be undertaken by the agents of the Industrial Mission. Friends whom I have consulted are strongly of opinion that an expert should be sent out to Frere Town at once to investigate and report upon the whole scheme. For this purpose, a sum of £200 or £300 will be required. It is a small item in such an undertaking as is in view, and will, it is hoped, be speedily raised. There is no time to be lost, as an expert must be found, and negotiations entered into at once, so that he may go out to East Africa at the commencement of the New Year at the latest."

Communications may be addressed to the Secretary of the Industrial Missions Aid Society, 17, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Whom to Trust.

I will trust in the Lord with my whole heart and soul,
I will trust the Physician whose touch can make whole;
I will trust in the Shepherd that guardeth his sheep,
I will trust in the Captain that rules o'er the deep!

I will trust in the Rock that immovably stands,
I will trust in that Love that embraceth all lands;
I will trust in the Guide who will point me the way,
I will trust in the King whom 'tis joy to obey!

I will trust in the Friend of the needy and poor,
I will trust in the Strength whose protection is sure;
I will trust in the Arm that around me is thrown,
I will trust in the Saviour of sinners alone!

Welcome Home, Canning Town. — An interesting gathering of the Christian Lifeboat Crew was held on Tuesday, December 3, at the Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town, E., when Col. Macgregor gave a very instructive address on the Lord's Coming. The text given out by Miss Child for the month was "I will come again and receive you unto myself" (John xiv. 3). Mr. Wm. Luff followed, and several old seafarers continued on the same lines. All hearts were cheered with the thought of the blessed hope.

The Cotelingam Brothers.

DEAR SIR,—Since the publication in The Christian of September 12 last of an article relating to the Cotelingam Brothers, we have been in correspondence with these friends on the subject of their work.

We have called their attention to the necessity—if they wish to retain the confidence of the English public—of the appointment of a treasurer for the funds they collect, or, at all events, of the publication from time to time of authenticated accounts of their receipts and expenditure.

Our Indian friends, however, inform us that they regard their visit to this country, and work here, as a private enterprise of their own, and that they do not feel called upon to publish any accounts such as we suggested.

Shortly after their arrival in England, we furnished them with testimonials to facilitate their intercourse with friends in various places, understanding that they were proposing to make themselves acquainted with methods of Christian work in this country in preparation for future evangelistic efforts in India, for which they desired to raise funds.

As, however, their present method of procedure does not seem to us in harmony with what we then understood, we have asked them to withdraw the testimonials with which we furnished them from any future editions of their publications and circulars.

In taking this course, we do not wish to express an unfavourable opinion of the personal character of our friends and the work which they have in prospect, and sincerely desire that any service to which they are rightly called for the benefit of the natives of India may be followed with the Divine blessing.

It is scarcely necessary to add that the fact of their being natives of the country, so far from creating any prejudice in our minds against their undertaking, would lead us rather to rejoice in their being called to labour amongst their own people in India.

We remain, yours faithfully,

George Williams, St. Paul's Churchyard, London.
Joseph Storrs Fry, Union Street, Bristol.

[We have held the above letter over for a week pending inquiries. In regard to the suggestion in the last two paragraphs, as to the Cotelingam Brothers undertaking work among the natives of India, we are bound to say that they have hitherto failed to show us that they have in view any definite purpose in this direction, under conditions such as we could commend. We can only repeat what we said in The Christian of September 12 last (as above referred to), which was as follows:—"Either we and others have misunderstood the purpose of the Cotelingam Brothers in their proposed world-wide tour, or they have changed their minds concerning it. On the collecting-card which they have issued to their friends in various parts of the country, for raising money for them, the first of the brothers is described as 'Evangelist.' Sir George Williams is quoted as saying: 'It has been my great privilege to make the acquaintance of Messrs. Cotelingam, brothers of one family. These friends are making a world-wide tour, with a view to proclaiming the Gospel by speech and song. They have helped us at Exeter Hall. I most gladly give to them this note of introduction and commendation, in the belief that their efforts could not fail to be useful wherever an open door is found for them.' The Christian World is also quoted thus: 'The object of their tour is to engage in evangelistic work, and gather impressions and ideas which they can utilize on their return home.' In a recent interview, however, with the brothers, they distinctly disavowed the idea that they are on an evangelistic tour, but said that it is a private tour for studying the conditions of Christianity in the various countries they may visit. They have established collecting centres in various places, for the amounts received at which there is no treasurer other than themselves, nor is any statement of receipts and expenditure issued. As we deem the latter to be a necessity in any mission for which we stand in any degree as sponsors before the public, we wish it to be understood that this method of collecting money was entered upon without our knowledge, and that we are not in any way to be regarded as endorsing it."—Ed.]

The Peace Society.—As in previous years, the committee of this Society, 47, New Broad Street, London, E.C., have sent an invitation to observe Peace Sunday, which this year falls on December 22, to all ministers in charge throughout the kingdom, to the conductors of P.S.A., and to a number of Sunday-school teachers, making a total of about 37,000. They also make the usual offer of a selection of peace literature gratis. The replies already received indicate that the number accepting the invitation will be unusually large.

Million New Pledges Crusade.

REV. DR. HENRY'S CAMPAIGN.

ENTHUSIASTIC meetings continue to mark the progress of the campaign of Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and the Fisk Jubilee Singers. Two meetings were held on Tuesday, December 3, in the George Street Congregational Church, Croydon. Mr. Arnold Pye Smith, J.P., presided both afternoon and evening. An esteemed correspondent says of the second meeting, "It was crowded and most impressive. Dr. Henry seems to have developed power of a new order; he gave sledge-hammer facts which evidently told deeply upon his audience. Over fifty pledges were taken, and in the estimate of one friend with long experience in temperance meetings, a hundred more would probably have been secured had Dr. Henry been able to speak longer. The local secretary and committee worked with notable vigour, and made the arrangements with a completeness which deserves cordial recognition."

AN APPEAL TO WOMEN.

On the following day, Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers visited Beckenham, and held meetings, afternoon and evening, in the Public Hall. In the afternoon, Mr. FRANCIS HORNER presided, and in the evening, Mr. R. MURRAY HYSLOP. The committee had for these meetings made a determined attack upon half-heartedness, and the result was that large audiences were brought together, of those whose ears are not often reached by the sound of the temperance appeal. The Jubilee Singers were in splendid form, and rendered entrancingly several of their sweet songs of Zion. Dr. Henry carried all before him. The cogency of his reasoning, his complete mastery and skilful marshalling of facts and figures, and the avalanche of his superb oratory have made a lasting impression upon the all too unenthusiastic suburban residents. Forty pledges were taken, and several promises were made to give the subject serious attention, by those who will not be lost sight of by the local Abstainers' Union. At the reception tea held between the meetings there was an influential muster. It was evident that Dr. Henry's special appeal to women, made at the afternoon meeting, had taken immediate effect; it is anticipated that the women of the neighbourhood will band themselves together to undertake more effectively their own important part in the great temperance cause.

STIRRING MEETINGS IN THE NORTH.

On Thursday and Friday last meetings were held in Hull, and that great town was deeply stirred. On Thursday evening the Anlaby Road Circus was crowded to its utmost capacity, when Mr. T. R. FERENS, J.P., took the chair. Dr. Henry spoke with deep earnestness, pointing out that the fight is between Christianity and the drink traffic. He made urgent and telling appeals to Christian people, to rally to the temperance banner and strive strenuously to sweep away this terrible evil from the land. On Friday afternoon Rev. J. PICKETT presided over a large company, and, in introducing Dr. Henry, said that "there is not a greater scandal in this country in municipal and national matters than the defective administration of the liquor laws."

Newcastle-on-Tyne was visited on Saturday, Lord's Day, and Monday last, when meetings were held in the Town Hall. "The promoters of the campaign," says the Newcastle Daily Leader, "have to record successes in all the large centres of population. This consummation is largely due to the magnetic presence of Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, a speaker of great power and pathos, whose advocacy has been secured. His stirring personality and deep earnestness are such that those who have already heard him wish to hear him again, and those who have not had that privilege clamour for a visit." On the opening night the hall was filled. Dr. N. H. RUTHERFORD, the chairman, expressed his conviction that "temperance, which has been too long down in the trough of public opinion, is now rising with a great and glorious future before it." The speaker dealt largely with the medical aspect of the question, and warned his hearers that the history of the alcoholic habit is one of progressive paralysis. Dr. Rutherford was especially severe on the example of the moderate drinkers.

Dr. HENRY spoke for nearly an hour, and was listened to with eagerness throughout. He dealt with the great question of temperance from many standpoints, and showed that the churches have the necessary equipment for making temperance reform a triumphant success. "The time has come when every pulpit should ring with denunciations of the drink, when every minister should be a flaming evangel of temperance reform, and when every Christian congregation should be de facto a temperance society, for the glory of God."

On Lord's Day two large meetings were held, the respective presidents being Mr. T. A. GUTTERY and Mr. GEORGE LUNN. Dr. Henry spoke powerfully in the afternoon on the Bible as a total abstinence book, and in the evening on the Lord Jesus as a total abstainer. The attention was breathless, and at times positively painful. It was an occasion of much solemnity. The churches and Christians, it was felt, needed such messages. Fine preliminary work was done, and the demonstrations are to be followed by a week of meetings.

On Monday last meetings were again held afternoon and night. Mrs. R. Spence Watson presiding on the former occasion, and Mr. Goode Davis on the latter. Our correspondent writes: "In spite of a terrible snow and wind storm, calculated absolutely to destroy the hopes of good attendances, great audiences assembled, the only trouble being financial, and this by reason of the richer class being kept away by the weather. As a whole, the Newcastle meetings have been a great success and well worthy of this splendid campaign."

FUTURE MEETINGS.

Sheffield (Albert Hall), Friday, Dec. 13, 8 p.m., chairman, Sir Charles Skelton, J.P., Saturday, Dec. 14, 3 p.m., chairman, Alderman J. Wycliffe Wilson, 8 p.m., chairman, Councillor Sharman. Woodford Green (Congregational Church), Monday, 16, chairman, Mr. W. H. Brown. Bromley, Kent (Grand Hall), Wednesday, 18, 3.30, chairman, Mr. E. Aisbitt Gibson, 8, chairman, Mr. T. Lamb. Stoke Newington (Devonshire Square Baptist Church, Stoke Newington Road, N.E.), Thursday, 19, at 7.30, chairman, Rev. G. P. McKay.

Death of Mr. J. H. Burke.

WE regret to announce the death of Mr J. H. Burke, the well-known Gospel singer. The day after his funeral his stricken wife expired. In each case the cause of death was poisoning through the inhaling of sewer-gas. Mr. Burke will long be remembered for his Gospel labours in conjunction with Mr. Moody, Rev. John McNeill, and other evangelists. In our next issue we hope to give a portrait and further particulars.

Personalia.

Owing to indisposition, Mr. JAMES HAYES is reluctantly compelled to relinquish, at Christmas, the honorary superintendency of the Lowesmoor Undenominational Mission. It is regretted that no Christian gentleman of means is forthcoming to continue this work

Many friends will learn with interest that Mr PETER WHYTOCK (of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union) was, on December 3, married at Glasgow to Miss Jeanie Wilson. The ceremony was performed by Pastor David J. Findlay, of St. George's Cross Tabernacle.

The December number of Wings gives a portrait and sketch of Mrs. THOMAS WATTS, of Bedford, an earnest worker in connection with the Women's Total Abstinence Union. The wife of a minister who has seen long service in the Baptist denomination, Mrs. Watts has been greatly blessed in her home life. Of her six sons, three are graduates of Cambridge, and one of London University; the other two are articled to chartered accountants, and are showing no less aptitude in passing examinations with distinction. The Bedford branch of the W.T.A.U. has nearly 600 members, and Mrs. Watts is universally regarded as the mainspring of the society. While others occupy the platform she is busy guiding affairs, and organising measures of progress.

Welsh Notes.

AS a result of the "Self-Denial Week" for the benefit of the Welsh Forward Movement, over £1,000 has already come to hand. This result is satisfactory when it is borne in mind that "Self-Denial Week" is an innovation in Welsh religious life, and also that the chief support of the movement comes from Welsh churches.

According to the statement of Rev. Towyn Jones, one of the secretaries of the Welsh Congregational Twentieth Century Fund, there is still some £8,000 required in order to make up the £20,000 aimed at. In appealing to the Welsh Congregational Association of West Glamorgan for their contributions, the secretary stated that other associations were contributing liberally.

At a recent meeting of the Welsh Baptists of Monmouthshire, considerable dissatisfaction was evinced at the position of Welsh Baptists in the matter of contributing towards the Twentieth Century Fund. It was stated that the English Baptists are about to make up their quota; the poor churches of Ireland had given three times as much as was expected of them; Scotland had given twice as much; but Wales is far from doing its part.

At the half-yearly meetings of the West Glamorgan Baptists a paper on Sunday-school work was read by Rev. T. Morgan, Skewen. Among the suggestions made were these: that maps and blackboards should be used for illustrative purposes, and that teachers should be properly trained. In the course of the same meetings reference was made to the action of a Baptist Church near Swansea, which had decided to expel any follower of football, and also any member who sat for more than ten minutes in a public-house, unless he could give good reasons for his conduct.

A Welsh Congregational Church in Glamorganshire having promoted a "Grand Prize Drawing," the general committee of the Congregational Union has passed the following resolution: "That the attention of this committee having been called to a grand prize drawing in connection with a Congregational Church, it desires hereby emphatically to declare its strong disapproval of this method of raising money, as being opposed to the spirit of the New Testament, injurious to public morals, a violation of the traditions of our Congregational churches, and an incentive to that passion for gambling which is a growing curse in this country. For the same reason, it extends a like condemnation to the similar practice of 'raffling' in connection with 'sales of work for the benefit of Christian communions.'"

The Y.M.C.A.

The annual meeting of the Cape Town Y.M.C.A., presided over by Mr. J. D. Cartwright, M.L.A., was a very largely attended function. The gross membership reported was 801, showing a gain of forty-five upon last year's figures. All sections of the work, it was stated, were displaying great activity. The Mayor spoke most appreciatively of the usefulness of the work.

Members of Associations in the North Metropolitan district assembled for their autumn conference at the Hampstead rooms, when there was a good attendance of delegates. Mr. Budgett Meakin gave an address of a deeply interesting character, being notes of a tour among the Y.M.C.A.'s of the world, in connection with which Mr. Meakin has acted as honorary deputation of the National Council.

A few days ago, the annual meeting of the Kilburn Association was held in the Kilburn Hall, N.W., Mr. W. H. Seagram presiding. Encouraging accounts were given by the secretary of the blessing which has attended the work, both at the indoor and open-air meetings. The chairman spoke briefly but earnestly on the necessity for Christian young men seeking to win, by personal dealing, other young men for Christ; and Rev. J. G. Train gave a helpful address on resting on God, and going forward in his work. Rev. S. A. Selwyn and Henry Dewing also spoke words of help and encouragement.

The Annual Autumn Conference of the South Midland District Union took place in the new premises of the Henley-on-Thames Association. Upwards of sixty delegates were in attendance, under the presidency of Mr. Martin John Sutton. A valuable paper on "The Necessity of Individual Bible Study by Members," was read by Mr. C. E. Derham, general secretary at Sheffield. A crowded and enthusiastic meeting took place in the town hall in the evening, presided over by Mr. Leonard Noble, J.P., local president. Addresses were given by Lord Kinnaird and Mr. W. H. Mills, while Mr. R. T. Hermon-Hodge, M.P., Mr. Richard Overy, J.P., and the Hon. W. F. D. Smith, M.P., also took part in the proceedings.

"My Jewels."

HAVE you read the story of the Roman matron and her jewels? A wealthy lady of Rome once invited a friend to visit her in order to display before her wondering gaze a glittering array of precious jewels. From her caskets of gold she took the rare gems—rubies and pearls, amethysts and diamonds, and dazzled the eyes of her friend with her precious possessions. The visitor duly admired these treasures, and then in her turn said to their proud possessor: "These are wonderful and costly, but come and see my jewels." On the day appointed the lady of great wealth came with large and curious expectation to see the jewels of her friend. There were no caskets or gems to be seen in the room into which she was ushered, nor did her friend immediately bring forth any pearls or diamonds. But shortly two bright and bonnie boys came bounding into the room, and approaching, showed by the delight plainly written upon their faces how much they loved their mother. "These," said the Roman matron to her wondering visitor, "are my jewels."

That mother—and, indeed, every good mother does the same—counted her boys of greater worth than all the precious stones that flash in monarchs' crowns, or than all the gems "of purest ray serene, the dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear." And in a very blessed sense it is true that a mother's love is but a dim picture, and a faint forth-telling of the Saviour's love. Of the children who love Him, surely the Master says, "These shall be mine, in that day when I make up my jewels."

Little children, little children
Who love their Redeemer,
Are the jewels, precious jewels,
His loved and his own.

They are his purchased and precious possession. A treasure of priceless worth are the children to Him who died for them. Those who have been redeemed, not with corruptible things such as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, must be of infinitely more value than silver and gold—they must be a priceless worth to Him who bought them for his own. How beautiful, then, and precious is the thought to you, children, that Jesus Christ lays his sacred hands on your heads and says of you, "These are my jewels."

The Saviour guards his jewels. Men guard very jealously that which they count precious. Have you ever visited the Tower of London? Ancient and mighty are the battlements and walls of that historic pile that stands on the banks of the Thames. Strange stories could those grey old stones tell had they tongues. Away in the heart of that gloomy fortress is a strong room in which are kept the crown jewels of England. Before you reach that room you must pass through many gates, along dark corridors, and through o'erhanging archways that pierce the thick walls. As you proceed you see the fantastically dressed guards or "beef-eaters," who look like men who have suddenly stepped out of some old century to greet you. It is theirs to keep watch and ward over the treasures of the Tower. At length you are permitted to enter the strong-walled room where are treasured the jewelled crowns and diadems that belong to the Royal House of England. But even then you are not allowed to touch them. Stout bars of iron form a cage, within which, encased in glass, are preserved the golden ornaments, the gems, and diamonds, whose preciousness demands that they shall be thus jealously guarded, so that no band of robbers may ever touch them. And yet a thief once stole the crown of England even from the Tower of London!

So that the most elaborate precautions and defences are not proof against the cunning and violence of men. Christ guards his jewels far more securely. None can pluck his loved ones out of his hand. You have seen the little chick peeping out wonderingly from amidst the feathers of the mother bird, secure from all harm because of the protecting wings that gave shelter from the foe. And so the sweet singer of Israel says of God, "Under his wings shalt thou trust." Eternal safety there is in the shelter of the Cross. Christ guards from all impending harm those who love Him. Round them and about are cast "the everlasting arms." The vigilance of earthly guards may fail—the might of human protectors may be overcome, but the guardian care of an heavenly protector can never be surprised, his defence can never be o'erwhelmed. "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." The child of God indeed may sing with fullest assurance, "I fear no foe with Thee at hand to bless." Christ guards his jewels. The Saviour protects his own. And Christ's jewels shall shine in his Kingdom.

Like the stars of the morning,
His bright crown adorning,
They shall shine in their beauty,
Bright gems for his crown.

Little children must love their Redeemer if they are to shine in his kingdom. Only those who remain Christ's jewels will shine in his crown. Terrible is the thought, and yet true that the jewel may lose its lustre. Listen to a parable. The flashing diamond is the most precious of precious stones—the most costly of gems. And the grimy coal is the commonest of minerals. And yet both the diamond and the coal are really composed of the same substance. The chemist will tell us they are both carbon. At first they were the same, but in the one case the carbon has been subjected to certain processes of fire and pressure in nature through long ages, and the result is the flashing diamond—fit for a monarch's crown, and in the other the carbon has been wrought into coal—the common fuel for our winter fires.

And so, boys and girls, and men and women, at the last will either be fit to shine as gems in the Saviour's crown, or will be as fuel for the fire. The wheat will He gather into his garner, but the chaff will He burn with unquenchable fire. Thank God, not one of us need be cast out at last, for Christ counts all the souls for whom He died precious beyond price. And if we come and seek his pardon He will forgive all the past, and make us good. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom of their Father."

About Prize Competitions.

AS far as I can judge the wishes of my young readers and their parents, it seems that will be more acceptable to the majority than either two or four.

THREE

Hitherto, as some of you have been painfully aware, most of the competitions have come in term time, which has made very hard work of what should be a pleasure. By the new arrangement they will come at the end of April, August, and December, so that at least two of them will come in the holidays, when many of you are pining for something to do!

There will thus be sixteen weekly Searchers before next competition (April 24), for which those will be eligible whose names appear in the weekly list twelve times during that period.

Now is the time to induce others of your young friends to join. Get as many as you can, so that we may have good long lists for the coming term.

NEXT PRIZE COMPETITION.

The Prize Questions to be set on December 26 will be from:—

1 Samuel for Division I. (those under ten).

1 and 2 Samuel for Division II. (those under thirteen).

1 and 2 Samuel and Epistle to Galatians for Divisions III. and IV. (those under fifteen and eighteen respectively).

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

NEXT TERM.—Rules for Bible Searchers.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. Answers for the "second list" which reach the office after midday Wednesday are too late. Those from Scotland and Ireland only will be received till Thursday morning.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

All communications must be addressed to "Uncle Tom," the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

☞ PRIZE COMPETITIONS—NEW RULES. ☜

Please note that in future there will be Three Prize competitions instead of four in the year, namely, at the end of April, August and December.

There will thus be sixteen weekly Searchers before next Competition, for which those will be eligible whose names have appeared as correct in the weekly list twelve times between Jan. 2 and April 24.

Those whose 10th or 13th birthdays occur during this period may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age. There is no limit of age for weekly searchers; but no one above eighteen years of age can enter for the Competitions.

THE IMPERIALISM OF CHRISTIANITY (Daniel ii. 44, 45).

THE Kingdom of Babylon was the first of the great world kingdoms. The reign of Nebuchadnezzar introduced the era in which we are now living, and which is destined to last until the setting up of the kingdom of the Son of Man. The whole history of the two thousand five hundred years is epitomised in the vision of this chapter. The head of gold was Nebuchadnezzar. The silver arms and breast were the kingdom of the Medes and Persians, the story of the setting-up of which is told in the fifth and sixth chapters of this book. The brazen thighs represent the Grecian Empire under Alexander; whilst the legs of iron stand for the Roman Empire, which in the course of time became broken up into the ten kingdoms of Europe. These kingdoms, or the remains of them, are still in existence, and are likely to continue until God sets up the Kingdom which shall never be destroyed.

Notice the deterioration of all human government. However lofty its first beginnings, it goes from better to worse until it ends in instability.

Some have thought that the mingling of clay and iron indicates the increasing power of the people in determining government, but through all these dreams and visions there is always the yearning for the Man, the perfect, glorious Man, who shall be able to cope with all problems that represent the Divine and human ideal This vision of Nebuchadnezzar has haunted the minds of all the greatest men, and is destined to be realized only in Jesus Christ.

The kingdom of our Lord is now in secret, as David's while Saul was on the throne, and he was condemned to hide in the holes and caves of the earth. Satan is still the god of this world, though the world has been redeemed and Jesus Christ is its crowned King. As yet, however, we can only gather around Him as the recognised King of men, but as it was with David, so it shall be with David's Son, He shall be recognised, honoured, and obeyed everywhere.

There have been many suggestions as to the coming of this Kingdom, for which we daily pray. Probably we can only wait till it be revealed, but to me it seems that the first great movement towards it will be when the Lord Jesus Christ and his saints are able to fill the atmosphere of our world with holy influences, as it is now filled with evil ones; when, in fact, Christ and his saints shall take the place of the devil and fallen spirits who now rule the darkness of this world. When these are put away, the influences which have opposed the progress of the kingdom will be replaced by those that shall favour it. Instead of the wind being in the face of virtue, it will be with it, helping it forward, and crowning it with prosperity.

But there is more than this. The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, when every eye shall see Him, and the nations of the world shall stand before his bar, receiving his award. Oh, blessed Millennial Age, of which prophets and kings have spoken, when there shall be no public-house, no abode of shame, no cruelty, no wrong, for the Lord God shall reign with majesty, and his love shall pervade every heart, and be the warm atmosphere of every life!

"The stone was cut out of the mountain without hands." Here is the divine origin of Jesus Christ. He will break in pieces the iron and brass; here is the destructive, disintegrating power of the Gospel, before which the ancient idolatries and tyrannies have already disappeared, and before which war, passion, the drink traffic, and the reign of impurity shall cease, and which itself shall never be destroyed. Here is the imperishableness of God's blessed reign of righteousness, which, when it once emerges from the effects of man's fall, shall hold on its glorious way for ever and ever.

Accept the King, young friend. You are part of the Kingdom here, and ultimately shall sit with Christ on his throne, and reign with Him. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

Dr. Clark, the "Father" of Christian Endeavour, has promised to attend the Manchester Convention next Whitsuntide. Dr. Maclaren is expected to preach the Convention sermon.

At the seventh anniversary of the South-West Essex Union, the secretary reported sixty societies, with a membership of 2,058 active, 709 associate, and 222 honorary members. Two hundred and eleven members have joined the Church during the year.

Rev. F. J. Horsefield, vicar of St. Silas', Bristol, and president of the Church of England Union of Christian Endeavour, visited Birmingham recently to explain the aims and methods of the Endeavour Movement. Five churches were represented at the meeting. In addition to the one Society that was affiliated then, it is expected that several others will be started n the course of a few weeks.

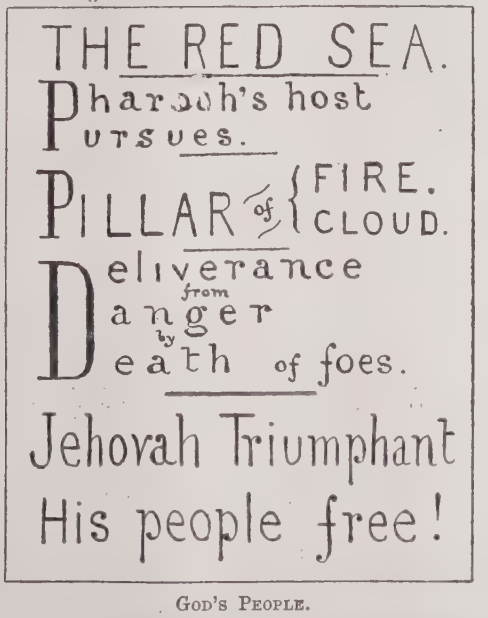
THE PASSAGE OF THE RED SEA (Exo. xiv. 13-27).
GOLDEN TEXT: Exo. xv. 1.
CONNECTIVE STORY.

WE left the Hebrews eating the Passover feast. The Egyptians in their anguish and distress begged them to leave the land and helped them to get away. They were all ready to go, and departed like a well-organized army, and Moses did not forget to take Joseph's stone coffin with them. You will remember that they were to go to Horeb and worship God there, before marching to Canaan. Across the border of Egypt, from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea, the Pharaohs had built a great wall as a defence from enemies; three roads led through. Moses led the people by that near the Red Sea. They were not left in doubt as to which way to go, for Jehovah led them Himself, going before them by day as a Pillar of Cloud and by night as a Pillar of Fire. Starting from Rameses, to Succoth, thence to Etham, then led by God southward, we find them now encamped by the northern point of the Red Sea. This sea extended much further north in those days than it does now. Papyri and monumental inscriptions have been found bearing names closely resembling those here mentioned.



GOD'S PEOPLE.

After all that God had done for them, surely they should not have been frightened now! But the Egyptians had recovered from their panic and were coming after, and the people upbraided Moses with bitter, angry words (11, 12). Moses had no fears and encouraged the people (13). He saw God's opportunity in his people's extremity (14). Jehovah Himself was their Saviour, and He removed his position, coming in between them and their enemies—dense darkness to the Egyptians, bright light to God's people. The whole story is full of lessons for us. God's children need never be afraid. Though hemmed in with difficulties, they must watch for God's way out, "stand still" when He tells them, "go forward" at His command. If Jehovah be our God and Jesus our Saviour we need fear no evil. What numberless times God says "Fear not"! No one could ever be in a worse position than these Israelites. (Refer Joshua v. 13, 14; Psa. lxxviii. 13, 14; Isa. xii. 2.)

JEHOVAH'S DELIVERANCE.

"The Angel of the Lord" (19). Angel means messenger (Mal. iii. 1; Isa. lxiii. 9; Psa. civ. 4.) The Creator of the wind, used it for his own purposes. As the morning dawned the people saw the waters had been driven back, and were on each side of them as a wall of defence. Psa. lxxvii. 14-20 gives us a poetical description of the scene. Josephus tells us that the crossing was accompanied by a fearful storm, which broke over the sea when the Egyptians were trying to follow. There were almost as many Israelites as there are people in London, and all their flocks, herds, and belongings, so it must have been a wide path and have taken a long time. Picture Moses and Aaron heading the procession, Moses with his rod outstretched. Our God knows how to deliver (2 Peter ii. 9; 2 Cor. i. 10).

THE EGYPTIANS (24, 25).

The mad anger of the enemy drove them on, forgetting the plagues and God's power. Certain of success, for they had driven the fugitives into a corner, they pursued, not knowing they were in the bed of the sea, till God shone out suddenly from the cloud. Then, when too late, they acknowledged the King of Kings. Just how hundreds and thousands are doing, and when too late mourn their madness.

THE RESULTS.

Destruction to all God's enemies. The famous Egyptian chariots all gone—what a sight for Pharaoh, who was probably waiting at the camp with the foot soldiers (2 Thess. i. 6-9; Luke xix. 27). God's people "saw," "feared," "believed," and "praised" (31). The oldest recorded poem in the world is Moses' song (chap. xv.).

Scottish Notes.

TEMPERANCE workers have an interest in a speech made at Dundee a few days ago by Mr. Macfarlane, organizer of the Scottish Licensed Trade Defence Association, in which he urged the necessity of all sections of the trade being united on behalf of their interests, in view of the fact that in all probability a good deal of defence work would require to be done in the near future.

At the sixty-first annual meeting of the Edinburgh Sabbath Morning Fellowship Union—held under the presidency of Mr. R. L. Orr, advocate—the report showed that the seventy-one affiliated associations have a membership of 2,566.

Under the auspices of the Edinburgh Working Men's Christian Sabbath Society a conference was held a few days ago on "Cab Driving on Sabbath in Edinburgh," under the chairmanship of Dr. McGibbon. Mr. George McRobert, who opened the discussion, declared that the practice, fraught with sad and grave results, was greatly on the increase in the city. Mr. Henry Cant read a paper on "The Present-day Irreverence Towards the Sabbath," and a resolution was passed appealing to the Christian public on the subject. Among others who spoke were Miss Annie Kerr, Mr. John Youngson, and ex-Councillor Rose.

At the fifth annual meeting of the Edinburgh Rescue Shelter, the report showed that 226 girls had been dealt with, and 107 of them sent to homes. The number of cases received is the largest in any one year, and the results had been the most gratifying. In St. Luke's Home, thirty-three women had been received. Attention was directed to the extreme youth of some of the cases, many of them being of an age to fall within the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act. The attention of the police was called to the point.

Evangelistic.

Mr. W. D. Dunn in Wick.

THAT veteran in Gospel service, Mr. W. D. Dunn, has just concluded a four weeks' mission in the Baptist Church at Wick, which has had a remarkably spiritual effect. The meetings grew in numbers and interest, and the Word was preached with power night after night, with the result that many, both young and old, have sought and found the Saviour. Church life has been revived, and Christian workers have been inspired with renewed zeal and earnestness to labour for the Master in this difficult sphere. We are deeply grateful to God for the visit and ministry of his servant.

John Elder.

Among Ayrshire Fishermen.

Under the auspices of the Ayrshire Christian Union, Mr. James Cumming has just concluded a helpful three-weeks' mission among the fishermen at Dunure, Ayrshire. The preacher delivered the Gospel message nightly in song and story, the Lord blessing the Word to many. Some young fishermen, who came to the meetings to disturb, more than to listen, came under the convicting power of God's Spirit, and were led to decide for Christ. At the closing meeting Christians bore testimony to quickening received, backsliders, of restoration, and between twenty and thirty said they had trusted Christ during the mission, and meant to follow on to know the Lord.

W. C.

Baptist Church, Keiss, N.B.

A three weeks' mission has been conducted by Mr. Charles Galletly, of the Evangelization Society (Scottish branch), at the new Baptist Church, Keiss, N.B. In spite of the inclemency of the weather, the people gathered to hear the Word preached, some coming four and five miles to attend the services. Quite a number of young men and women have given themselves to the Lord, and very many are still deeply concerned. On the Saturday before closing the Mission, a conference was held, the pastor, Rev. W. G. Taylor, presiding. The speakers were Rev. John Elder, Wick, and Messrs. W. D. Dunn and Charles Galletly. The addresses given were much appreciated, and Mr. Galletly's visit will long be remembered.

T.

The Railway Mission.

The first anniversary of the Preston Branch of the Railway Mission was celebrated recently, when Mr. John Hawkins conducted the services. Blessing was given in each meeting. Every night the cry was heard, "What must I do to be saved?" Mr. Hawkins and two of the workers visited all the goods yards, where the Gospel message was spoken as the men dined. By this means hundreds were reached who do not usually attend the regular meetings. The men in the different departments listened most attentively, and came to the meetings at night, when several young men yielded to the Saviour. Mr. Hawkin's singing and speaking was blessed to many hearts. We have had quite a revival among our railway men. To God be all the praise!

A, B.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

November in the East End of London is not the best month for special services, yet Mr. Thomas Richardson, of Rotherhithe Free Church, has had a very fruitful mission. Mr. Richardson's association with the work for so many years before he went to the South side of London is sufficient to account for the large gatherings during his stay. The nightly meetings were large, and on Sundays the hall was filled from floor to top gallery. Mr. Richardson's addresses are nothing if they are not stirring, forcible, and pungent. Both those to Christians and to the unsaved were greatly blessed. The inquiry-room revealed that the Gospel had again proved the power of God unto salvation to very many who believed. On Thursdays Mr. Richardson gave Gospel temperance lectures with dissolving views, when the hall was crammed; many pledges were taken, and some gave their hearts to Christ. At the Sunday evening gatherings the impressive and solemn singing of Madame Annie Ryall prepared many a heart for the reception of the Gospel seed.

Mr. P. Russell Hurditch at Bath Y.M.C.A.

The recent visit of Mr. P. Russell Hurditch for a week's mission proved all too short. The workers rallied in good numbers to meet Mr. Hurditch on the Saturday evening, while early on Sunday morning and in the afternoon the reading-room was comfortably filled with young men, who eagerly listened to the missioner's testimony. Many members of the "C.E." Societies of the city helped in the evening meeting. This was the only meeting to which ladies were admitted. There was a good percentage of young men in the audience, which consisted of over 400 people. Revs. E. L. Hamilton and J. T. Dunn assisted the mission by their presence and kindly co-operation. At each gathering the presence of God was manifest, resulting in a number definitely taking the step, as the missioner put it, "from the platform of conviction to the train of trust." The last night of the mission was one never to be forgotten. All over the hall men rose and asked to be prayed for.

George H. Gibson, Secretary.

Coatbridge East United Free Church.

Coatbridge, with its many furnaces, is one of the great centres of the iron-making industry, and on Sabbaths, as well as on week days, by day and by night, in successive relays, the workers toil wearily on. It is very questionable if there is any other town in Scotland of equal size that has so many of its inhabitants engaged in Sabbath labour; and, as is generally admitted, such labour does not tend to spiritual advancement, whatever poets may say about the "sacredness of toil." But in this town of iron there are many earnest Christian men and women at work, and, not the least in earnest service and painstaking endeavour to win men for Christ is Rev. Adam Maxwell, of the East United Free Church. It is over twenty years since we shared with him the joy of harvest in his first pastorate, and all along we have marked his useful career with interest. A course of meetings in connection with the East U. F. Church has just been held, and the grace of God that bringeth salvation has made an abundant channel for itself, bringing deliverance to many precious souls. Mr. Ramsay, one of the agents of the U. F. Church Assembly, was the evangelist for the first two weeks—the time originally contemplated for carrying on the mission. So great, however, was the interest awakened, that it was felt that the services should be continued longer. An application having been made to Mr. John Anderson, of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, for help, three of the B.T.I. students were sent out to conduct the meetings during the third week.

Different incidents in the mission, not to speak of the general interest, have given room for overflowing cheer. One man, whose brothers occupy professional positions in the realms of law and medicine, and who was himself designed for the ministry by fond parents, but who has for long been living a sad life, was professedly brought over the line for Christ. Another, a person in good circumstances, and a respectable man, said to the preacher one night: "You might speak to me. You have put your finger on the very thing that has been keeping me back from Christ." The tears were standing in his eyes as he said this. As the evangelist was hurrying off to catch a train, he said, "Come away and walk down the street with me." "Oh!" said the man, "I am in such a state I couldn't walk down the street with anyone." However, by the following night he had walked into the kingdom, for with beaming face he said to the evangelist, "I'm all right now."

The Boy Preacher at Shoreditch.

Following on his recent mission at Bloomsbury Chapel, Jack Cooke, the "boy preacher," is conducting a week's evangelistic services at Shoreditch Tabernacle. On Lord's Day last the capacious building in which Rev. W. Cuff has so long ministered to the spiritual needs of the Shoreditch and Bethnal Green district was twice filled by overflowing audiences, and many seekers were pointed to the Saviour.

Monday evening saw the Tabernacle again thronged in every part. The audience was comprised of plain work-a-day people, including a large proportion of young men, and the proceedings, while fervently evangelistic, were by no means sensational. The meeting was greatly helped by the splendid congregational singing.

The first portion of the service was conducted by Mr. Coutts, the assistant and travelling companion of the young preacher, and Mr. Cuff also took part. In some sympathetic opening remarks, the pastor expressed deep gratitude for the blessing already given in the meetings. "The sobs of the penitent and the prayers of the guilty have been heard, and there is much cause for encouragement."

The boy, or, rather, the youth, preacher gave an earnest address, based on John i. 11, 12. Mr. Cooke quickly showed that he has a notable gift of language. Dramatic in manner, and pouring forth a copious stream of argument for Christianity, denunciation of sin, and invitation to seek pardon, he held the attention of the vast audience to the end. It is true that his boyish appearance and declamatory pulpit manner are somewhat suggestive of a clever youth delivering a well-memorized speech, but certainly he preaches the Gospel. Perhaps he is unequal. But is there any human preacher to whom some such strictures would not apply? We feel as keenly as any the danger of forcing a young worker into undue prominence, but it is our place to pray rather than to criticise. The Lord knoweth them that are his, and can make use of whatever material He will, to do his work. The rush of the preacher's words, the tripping ease of his volubility, may tend to occasional monotony, but if interest flickers, it is readily revived by some tersely put truth or pointed home-thrust. If the volunteered explanations of great problems seemed now and then insufficient, the speaker's earnestness carried him through. He closed with clear and solemn words of appeal for immediate decision.

While all heads were bowed in prayer, Mr. Cooke called upon those who desired to seek Christ to raise their hands, and a number responded. In addition to the nightly meetings of the present week, Mr. Cooke is to speak to men only in the Tabernacle on Sunday next at three o'clock.

Mr. H. Hull and a few Christian soldiers have conducted an eight days' mission at Shaftesbury Hall, Deptford. A good number, chiefly of the working class, decided for Christ.

A fortnight's mission has just concluded at Grafton Square Baptist Church, Clapham. The services were conducted by Messrs. W. Olney, Spencer Johnson, Ned Wright, and J. S. Harrison, assisted by the pastor. Over forty have professed conversion.

On December 3, a rally of converts and friends was held in Conway Memorial Hall, Walthamstow, in connection with the London Tent Campaign at Walthamstow, under the presidency of Rev. Charles Wickham, who spoke some helpful words to the converts. Mr. Leonard Weaver also gave an interesting and instructive address, and the solos given by Miss Angel were much appreciated. The Walthamstow Gospel Band also took part.

Mission services were held in the Public Hall, Urmston, during the week beginning Sunday, November 17, conducted by Rev. R. Tallontire. There was a meeting for men only on the Sunday afternoon, which was well attended. Meetings for young people and for women only were also held. Great blessing has been received, and one result of the mission is a decision to start a P.S.A. for men at the beginning of next year.

At the parish church of Portlemouth, Salcombe, a ten days' mission has just been conducted by Rev. J. O. West, rector of St. Philip's, Bristol. Many Nonconformists joined in the services, which have been greatly appreciated. On one occasion Rev. W. R. Bailey closed the service in the Wesleyan Chapel in time for himself and his congregation to join in the service at the parish church, and in the aftermeeting Mr. Bailey led in prayer.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, M.A., of Cambridge, has concluded a ten days' mission at St. Ann's Well Road Church, Nottingham (Rev. J. D. Allan, pastor). There has been a quiet, gracious, and deeply-impressive work of God from beginning to end. The visible results are already numerous and most encouraging, and a great aftermath is confidently anticipated. The inquiry-room method was not followed, but cards, bearing a form of committal and consecration to Christ, were circulated and effectually employed. A large class for inquirers is being formed.

The fortnight's mission services recently conducted by Mr, Wharton at the Liberal Hall, Bagshot, have had good results. Many have publicly signified that they have yielded to the Saviour. A feature of the mission was the well-attended services for children, which were held twice each week. The songs of Zion taught to the young people by Mr. Wharton are often heard in the streets and lanes of the neighbourhood. On Tuesday, November 26, the mission closed with a lecture and exhibition of lime light views from Mr. A. V. Liley, who described his missionary labours in North Africa. The hall was well filled with an appreciative audience.

Notes & Comments

OWING to the Christmas Holidays, we shall be compelled to go to press early with our next week's issue. Therefore urgent communications must reach us by Friday morning this week.

Christmas. We are once more face to face with the happy festival of Christmas, and the thoughts of Christian people will be busy with the memory of the Lord's coming, and with the duties inspired by that event. It is said that the spiritual significance of Christmas is being gradually forgotten, while its humanitarian aspects are continually becoming more pronounced. If that is true of the world in general, it must be largely the fault of the Church, which fails to proclaim adequately the religious message of the season. Christmas is the festival of Christ, the Son of God, who was born of a Virgin, and became flesh that through Him the world might be redeemed. Without Him, Christmas must degenerate into a Pagan festival; with Him every family party, every overflow of goodwill, is consecrated into a sacred feast. And as the outcome of this fact, let us not forget those who are ministering unto the necessities of others. A list of charitable agencies is given on p. 24, which we hope our readers will study, and respond promptly to the call.

Christmas and War. This is the third English Christmas that is overshadowed by the war-vulture, which still hovers over those fair South African lands, where 200,000 of our soldiers are engaged in the most terrible of occupations, far from home and country, and where our enemies are undergoing equal suffering and destitution. The hearts in many homes will be desolate because of absent faces, and the thought of others lying, for ever still, under the African sod. War never seems so horrible as when brought face to face with the gentle and loving association of Christmas. The thought of its woful and far-reaching sorrows should make us very tender and sympathetic in our prayers for those who are specially suffering by it, and very earnest in our petitions that this cruel struggle may be speedily ended. Is not this the time when our enemies as well as our friends should be specially remembered at the Throne of Grace?

Peace Sunday. The Sunday nearest Christmas Day is generally observed as "Peace Sunday." If sermons are not preached directly upon the subject of peace, at least many prayers will be offered for the restoration of peace—"Give peace in our time, O Lord." There is urgent reason why earnest prayer should be made in all our churches for the speedy termination of the war. It would be most unwise for anyone to make "Peace Sunday" the occasion for a display of party feeling, since among the very best people in the land there is a hopeless difference of opinion about the present war. But all parties ought to find common ground in praying for peace, and without earning the now opprobrious epithet of "pro-Boer."

The Concentration Camps. It is a relief to all of us to hear from Mr. Brodrick that the horrors of the Concentration Camps are to be swept away, or at least to be mitigated to the greatest possible degree, by placing the refugees under civil rather than military control. The very notion of a concentration camp carries with it the possibilities of dreadful mortality, especially when those confined in the compound possess only elementary notions of cleanliness. One great mistake has been in leaving soldiers to attend to the arrangements. From the first this should have been a civil work. But, better late than never.

The Children's Act. The Bill to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to children will come into force on January 1, and official copies of it can now be obtained at the price of one penny. It is desirable, for obvious reasons, that temperance workers should make themselves familiar with its provisions, which, however, are but few, as the measure is contained within about fifty printed lines. There is, of course, considerable agitation in regard to it in the drink trade, and it is stated that means are being devised for the evasion of the spirit of that clause which provides for the use only of "corked and sealed vessels." Gummed labels, capable of easy removal, will, it is said, be brought into use, and even postage stamp margins; but if such attempts are made, the United Kingdom Alliance will bring some test cases into the Law Courts for decision. In any case, however, the action of the Bill cannot but be beneficial, and it is noteworthy that already certain publicans have announced that they will not in any circumstances sell drink to children under fourteen years of age.

The Housekeeper of London. Lord Rosebery's reference last week to the London County Council as "the Housekeeper of London," was very happy and very suggestive also. But when his lordship went on to suggest that such a housekeeper should be allowed to do her work without perpetual interference from other powers, he touched the sore point in the system of our home government. With such a splendid body of men now administering the affairs of the world's chief city, we should doubtless see very many abuses swept clean away if it were not for the veto often placed upon the Council by a superior power. Surely if London elects its governors, the latter should be left unfettered to work in the highest interests of the majority. It is a contradiction of elementary justice when the welfare of the many is set aside by the caprice or interests of the few.

Anna Shipton's Works. In reference to the suggestion made by the writer of the brief life-sketch of Mrs. Anna Shipton (see p. 17), Messrs. Morgan & Scott are willing to make special arrangements to enable the friends of the late gifted authoress to circulate her works freely among those who would be benefited by their perusal. Particulars may be had on application.

Daily Bible Readings. In view of the approaching completion of the present series of "Day by Day" Bible Readings, we have pleasure in announcing, for the information of inquirers, that Rev. F. B. Meyer hopes to follow it with a similar course. We can assure our readers that the same spiritual aim will be kept in view. Indeed, Mr. Meyer anticipates that he will find water and depths deeper than any he has ever touched yet.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's "Joshua." The deeply spiritual teaching of the volume claims a hearty welcome for Rev. F. B. Meyer's Joshua, which has just been issued in the new form. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) The main object of the author has been to bring out the wonderful, minute, and precise parallels between the story and the experience both of the Church and of the individual Christian. The book has been helpful to many as a guide into the life of faith and of consecration, and those who would see the hand of the Lord in the circumstances of daily life will find here many finger-posts by the way.

Scriptures for India. A first list—published as a supplement to the Indian Witness—has reached us of the applications received from missions in India under the "Queen Victoria Memorial Bible Scheme." Additional lists are promised; but the first shows that, liberal as has been the response from Christians in this country, much yet remains to be done if the present great opportunity to witness for Christ among our fellow-subjects in the East is to be adequately taken advantage of.

The Church's Chief Work. In his preface to the recently-published autobiography of a well-known evangelist, Dr. Maclaren of Manchester sounds a note which we hope will resound in all our churches. Defending the work of the evangelist as a Divine enterprise, Dr. Maclaren addresses all who bear the name of Christ thus:—

> It will be a good day for all the churches when their members ask themselves whether they are doing the work for which they are established by their Lord, if they fail in winning men to be his, and whether Christ will be satisfied if, when He asks them why they have not carried out his commands to take his Gospel to those around them who are without it, they answer, "Lord, we were so busy studying deep theological questions, arguing about the validity of critical inquiries as to the dates of the books of the Bible, preaching and hearing eloquent discourses, that we had to leave the Christless masses alone."

Is there not very real need for this reminder, both amongst the members of many churches, and their ministers also?

Teaching the Teacher. Mr. Compton Rickett, M.P., in an address at Scarborough, declined to take that pessimistic view of the future before our Sunday-school system to which so much prominence has been given for some time back. He, on the contrary, sees in front of it, in this twentieth century, a greater work even than that which it undoubtedly has carried out in the century just completed. No doubt it is true that the influence of thirty years of national education has improved the mental status of the Sunday-school scholars, but, if this has been the case, Mr. Compton Rickett thinks the difficulty can easily be met by the selection of teachers of a proportionately higher standard, yet, it may be added, filled with that burning zeal in the Master's service without which all scholarship would be vain. As Mr. Compton Rickett said :

The ethical teaching of the day school demanded the spiritual motor force which set morality in action. The Bible taught as literature must be re-taught as a hand-book of religion. Sunday-school teaching requires to be lifted to a higher level of instruction, and classes to prepare teachers for their work are possibly the chief remedy against the decline of the Sunday-school and the leakage between school and church, to which attention has lately been drawn.

Village Schools. The Church Review, in speaking of the future of Church Schools, wisely says that the crux of any new educational settlement lies in the village schools, and in "doing justice to the Nonconformist children attending them." If this policy had been followed from the beginning, it would have forestalled one of the most acrimonious controversies of the age. It is not easy for the Sacerdotal party to fulfil such a condition, even when they may individually desire to do so, since, according to their theory, Nonconformity has no right to exist; and we fear that if that party ever got into power again, the best intentions would not avail to keep them from following their premises to their conclusion. This is clear from a sentence in the same article, in which the writer speaks of the "thousands of children who are at present being poisoned by the . . . undenominational religion in the Board Schools"!

The Evils of the Gambling Mania. The Liverpool Bank robbery is a fresh and vivid instance of the terribly debasing effects of the gambling and betting craze which seems to be perpetually rooting itself deeper in the heart of the nation. It illustrates one of the most perilous aspects of that desolating evil. The coarser vices, such as profligacy and drunkenness, cannot be indulged in without leaving their visible traces on face and constitution; they proclaim themselves aloud in their shattering consequences. But gambling, while capable of even greater licence in the range of indulgence, is not accompanied by any outward and visible marks of its moral ravages. Only when the scale of operation is ruinous, and the evil has gone too far to be remedied, are its votaries usually brought to a sense of its disastrous nature. It is also a sin which involves partnership in wrongdoing; and the victim of weakness is usually exploited by the unscrupulous and the strong to the undoing of both.

A Typical Catholic Appeal. A typical example of the Roman Catholic methods of raising money is found in an appeal sent forth under the authorization and blessing of the Roman Catholic Bishop of Northampton for the erection of a "Sanctuary in honour of the Holy Face and Five Wounds of Jesus" at Rushden, and which is scattered broadcast in Ireland among Protestants and Catholics alike. In a letter from the sender, Rev. J. B. Murray, a plea is made on behalf of the little children in the neighbourhood of Rushden, who, apart from the proposed "Altar of God in their midst," will, it is alleged, be raised without "the Holy Mass, the sacraments, or religious instruction." A ghastly picture accompanies the appeal, with a Litany to the Holy Face, marked by the usual sensuous imagery of Catholic writings. The incident savours of the most superstitious era of the Middle Ages rather than of the enlightenment and sobriety of to-day, and shows how low is the standard of appeal made by Romanism, and in how idolatrous a spirit the physical facts of the crucifixion are conceived by it. How degenerate a form of religion it is compared with the calm and spiritual teaching of the New Testament!

True Sisterhood. It is to be regretted that the methods followed in jails so frequently fail to have a reformatory effect, and that so much is left to be done by those societies which labour for the good of discharged prisoners—work which the State neglects, but which is of vital moment to the national well-being. Most of this beneficent Christian effort depends for its success upon personal sympathy and personal intercourse, and, in pleading for a development of this service, especially in the direction of discharged women and girls, Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, who herself affords an example of devotion to the needs and sufferings of the poor and unhappy, recently said :—

The true view of social life is social service, the ministry of one to another, and the recognition of the larger impersonal claim of the great outside suffering which calls to us, and which we must answer.

In this, as in other sections of the great vineyard, the fields are indeed white unto the harvest, but the labourers are yet few.

The Appeal to Conscience. In the course of the first of an admirable series of lectures being delivered in Westminster Abbey upon Indian Missions by the former Bishop of Bombay, the learned prelate shed a good deal of light upon the present Hindoo problem, and the manner in which Hindoos can be approached. Contrary to that "broad" spirit which is so popular, and which perceives in Hindooism only another form of Divine revelation, Dr. Mylne urges that metaphysical reasoning be abandoned about religion in the abstract, and that the Hindoos' attention be directed to the question of sin :—

In spite of all their intellectual assurance that a man's worst deeds and his best are but the outcome of the one Divine principle displaying itself in him, you will find that there is something of response, that you have touched the one chord by which the human heart is set in vibration in answer to the approach of the Divine. The cobwebs of all their fine-spun philosophy are swept away.

This is surely the thought of St. Paul, who says, "their conscience also bearing them witness." It is worthy of attention here, as well as in India. After all, the conscience is the best logician.

Progress in Madagascar. The most cheering accounts have come to hand of the progress of Christianity in Madagascar. All the day schools of the L.M.S. churches have been restored to the agents of that society, and the number of scholars is greater than ever. So are the congregations generally. A most encouraging sign is the fact that the religious services are proving a greater attraction than the Sunday amusements provided by the French officers. The people have recovered confidence that the French are sincere in granting strict religious toleration, and that all are really free to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience. The temporary aid of the Jesuits has thus resulted in the reinforcement of the Protestant faith in Madagascar, and the outlook is now most hopeful for that promising mission field.

A Humane Edict. The existence of slavery in German East Africa is one of the blots of that progressive government, and it is gratifying to find that a humane Imperial edict has just been issued, which will gradually tend to its abolition. No new slaves are to be made; no one may sell himself, or his wife, or his children, or be sold by his relatives, and it is no longer the penalty of adultery, debt, &c. The right of self-purchase under easy conditions is given to those now in slavery, and every slave is to be allowed two days a week in which he may work for himself. The transfer of slaves must not result in the separation of families against their will; and at any breach of duty towards a slave by his master, he is to go free. Short of abolition, this edict is about as statesmanlike a measure as could be devised, and is a great step towards putting an end to that cruel and antiquated institution.

Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, D.D. and the Fisk Jubilee Singers.

A New Campaign.

NOT since the days of John B. Gough has there been heard on the temperance platform a more impassioned or popular orator than Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, D.D. His praises are in all the churches, and naturally so, for with glowing language and unanswerable arguments he champions the cause of Christian institutions as against the habit and traffic in strong drink.

In conjunction with the famous Fisk University Jubilee Singers, Dr. Henry has been holding a series of demonstrations on behalf of the Million New Pledges Crusade of the Free Churches in the chief cities of Great Britain. More than 140 vast assemblies have listened spellbound to the fervent and convincing utterances of the speaker, and to the weird, fascinating melodies of the singers. A rich harvest of new pledges has been secured, and the friends of temperance have everywhere hailed the appearance of this new advocate, brimfull of force and inspiration, with delighted enthusiasm.

Deep and general interest, therefore, will be aroused by the announcement that although, in accordance with previous arrangements, the Free Churches Crusade is being brought to a conclusion on December 31, a committee, with an influential council of reference, is inaugurating an extension of the work, by a new campaign for Dr. Henry and the Singers in 1902.

Important responsibilities are borne by Dr. Henry in connection with the Anti-Saloon League of New York, but in view of the stimulus given to the temperance cause by the recent great gatherings at Manchester, Leeds, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Birmingham, Bristol, Liverpool, Sheffield, Cardiff, Norwich, Newcastle, &c., he has kindly agreed to continue, for a time, his fruitful labours in this country.

The extraordinary popularity of this happy combination of speech and song for the advancement of Gospel Temperance, is shown by the urgent applications for visits, which are pouring in to the Campaign Offices, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., from all parts of the United Kingdom.

Practical Papers.

On "The Illusions of Life."

"OH that I had held what I once possessed!" Painful as are the reflections in regard to the missing of opportunities that we might have seized (see last week's Practical Paper), they pale before those attaching to opportunities that we have actually possessed —and lost! Truly, a germ of fruitful thought is contained in the legal phrase, "To have and to hold."

The loser on Epsom racecourse, thinking ruefully of his emptied pockets, is a happy man compared with the one who has thrown away the golden chances of life that once were his. The first is a fool; the second is a knave; but each in turn is disillusionised.

The mutilated body of a man was found a few years ago on the railway near Redhill Junction. This is the written confession he left behind:—

I have broken every law of God and man, and can only hope that my memory will not linger in the minds of those who once knew me. Drink has brought me to this fearful end. I am dying, hopeless, friendless, penniless, and an outcast, and it might have been so different!"

The sting is in the concluding phrase; therein lie the bitterness and the gall. Character, virtue, integrity, honour—had, but not held; possessed, but lost! And it might have been so different! Doubtless there was a time when this poor fellow thought he was "enjoying life"; the disillusionment came, and he knew he had been toying with death.

Every form of sin possesses attractions peculiar to itself. The wine sparkles in the cup, and "moveth itself aright"; not until it is nearly all consumed do we realize that "at the end it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." Then we are disillusionised.

Jules Verne, in one of his fanciful stories, pictures a company of persons who voyaged to the Arctic regions. Arrived at a certain place, they disembarked, and settled upon a peninsula jutting out into the sea. They built their houses, sowed their grain in summer, and in winter collected furs. One stormy night they were awakened with a sudden shock. In the morning the sun seemed to rise in the west, and, as the day wore on, to set in the east. What had happened? The peninsula which had appeared to them as solid land was in reality ice, covered deeply with earth, which the tempest had detached from the mainland. As time progressed, the edges of their island home melted away; houses and crops disappeared, and in dire despair the sorry group drifted out to the boundless sea.

Yet all had seemed so permanent and real! No thought had they of disaster; no sense of peril distracted them—until the awful cleavage came; then, too late, they awoke to the bitter truth—disillusionised!

Consider the histories and characters of Esau and Jacob; and you will see that, just where the one man was quick to seize and retain opportunities, the other failed to hold them. Thus it was that when Esau went hunting, Jacob saw his opportunity, and snatched away the birthright which his brother had possessed, but which, for a mess of pottage, Esau cast away. And again, when the paternal benediction was to be had, he lost it; and the most that was left for him was a second-rate blessing, in response to his heart-breaking appeals: "Hast thou but one blessing, O my father?" "Hast thou not reserved a blessing for me?" "Bless me, even me also, O my father!" Can we not hear the echo of his cry in the words, "Oh that I had held what I once possessed"? But "he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully, with tears."

Another instructive illustration is related in 1 Kings xx. 39. As the king passed by a man cried to him and said, "Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle; and, behold, a man turned aside, and brought a man unto me, and said, Keep this man; if by any means he be missing, then shall thy life be for his life, or else thou shalt pay a talent of silver. And as thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone!" And the King of Israel said unto him, "So shall thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it."

Alas, have not we also failed to hold some of the most important blessings while we have been "busy here and there"? God committed to our care some opportunity of honouring Him, of doing good, some talent to use for Him; but, fussing about with trivialities, we missed the greater end in view. Many there are who, frivolling away their life, "busy here and there" with pleasures, gaiety, or sin, have let slip the grandest opportunities that God had placed before them for their own salvation, and for his service and glory.

Of the various classes mentioned in the Word of God who express the horrors of their disillusionment, we may note:—(a) The Wilful Sinner—Oh that I had "obeyed the voice of my teachers, and inclined mine ear to them that instructed me" (Prov. v. 13)! This is akin to Byron's couplet:—

My days are in the yellow leaf,
The fruit and flowers of love are gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief,
Are mine alone.

(b) The Backslider—"Oh that I were as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me" (Job xxix. 2)—a thought that is expressed also in the verse:—

What peaceful hours I once enjoyed,
How sweet their memory still;
But they have left an aching void
The world can never fill.

There is in a remote part of England a deserted village, now still as death, which once throbbed with the hum of busy life. Weeds and briars have overgrown the little plots formerly resplendent with flowers. But saddest of all, there stands the skeleton of the village sanctuary, dismantled and ruined. The walls which aforetime resounded with God's praise now harbour the wild bird and the reptile—a sad picture of a heart once devoted to the love and service of God, but now stripped of all its good by the powers of evil, and occupied by hateful and unclean desires. With a bitterness of soul deeper than that of Cain or Esau, when his disillusionment comes the backslider cries, "Oh that I had held what I once possessed!"

But lament bears no harvest, and mere regret is useless if it goes no further. It is not enough to know at midnight that the burglar is downstairs; active measures must be taken to stop his depredations if our property is to be secured. We must look back over the weeks or months or years to find the point at which declension first began.

Elisha asked the young prophet who lost his axe-head in the river, "Where fell it?" "And he showed him the place." Do you remember where you fell—your first serious temptation, your first step down, your first step back? Tell yourself and God where it was. Show the place, even though He knows it well.

O Saviour Christ! Thou, too, art man;
Thou hast been troubled, tempted, tried.
Thy kind but searching glance can scan
The very wounds that shame would hide.

Perhaps it arose from neglect of prayer, the Word of God, or the "Morning Watch"; from the restlessness experienced during a change of ministry at your place of worship; from the increase of business or worldly prosperity; from undesirable associations or companionships—every "heart knoweth its own bitterness," and every soul its own sore.

What is the remedy? First of all, our illusions must be dispelled; our eyes must be opened to our real condition. Then, conscious of our need, we may share the secret which Job discovered when he exclaimed, "Oh that I knew where I might find Him, that I might come even to his seat!" Here we have the Earnest Seeker. At the mercy seat, blood-sprinkled, the soul finds peace. Let us, at this Christmas time, remember that Christ came "to destroy the works of the devil," and "to save his people from their sins"; and that while we may have to regret to our dying day the loss of temporal or moral possessions that we have failed to hold, we may yet in Him find that rest of heart and mind which will go far to sweeten our regrets, and fit us to walk more firmly in the ways of God during the portion of life that remains to us. The Star of Bethlehem.

By Rev. Dr. BALGARNIE.

IT is less wonderful to us that the Magi of the East should have had their attention directed to "the star," than that they should have had the wisdom to follow it to the birthplace of the Infant Christ. For the star was not one of any of the constellations of the heavens. It did not rise and set as other orbs of night appear to do. To be a guide to them in their wanderings, it must have been near the earth; it must have revolved with our planet; it must have been seen, night after night, descending perpendicularly to its destination in the West, and becoming brighter and larger as it descended. A moment's contemplation of it must have convinced them that it was a light never yet seen on sea or land.

That it betokened some great event about to take place in the West was in keeping with their creed and traditions. They were astrologers, who tried to forecast the character, career, and destiny of men, according to their position under the star of their birth. The Child, therefore, who was to be born under this phenomenal star must have a character, career, and destiny above those of the sons of men. It was an inevitable conclusion from their creed. No doubt they learned much upon the way.

But men, even the wisest, do not always act up to the deductions of their creed. Curiosity to know the result, or anxiety to verify conclusions, will not account for the labour and peril which these men chose to undergo in order to do homage to this Child whose glory was already in the heavens. "We are come to worship him," they said; and they had brought with them a royal present wherewith to do honour to the new-born King.

But that "star" was likewise visible, at least in its setting, to another class of seekers. The shepherds of Bethlehem also beheld it, and in its close proximity. But to them it was familiar as the light of Israel, the Shekinah of the Exodus and the wilderness: "The glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid." The light that led the Magi and the shepherds to the cradle of our incarnate Lord was the same. "The light that lightens the Gentiles" is "the glory of his people Israel."

I came to Jesus and I found
In Him my Star, my Sun.

The Crowded Guestchamber.

A CHRISTMAS MEDITATION.

"There was no room for them in the inn" (Luke ii. 7).

"Where is the guestchamber?" (Luke xxii. 11).*

"NO room in the inn!" There is more in these words than appears upon the surface. Limited, in its strictly historical application, to the one event of Christmas eve, it may be morally and legitimately extended as to cover the entire life of our Lord. Over his entire career the words might be written, "There was no room for Him in the guestchamber." The world into which He came, as a whole, never welcomed Him into its heart, nor offered to Him unbounded hospitality. A few grand souls would have laid down their lives for Him—but how few. The majority tolerated Him, or admired Him, but there was no warm hospitality in their hearts for Him. The guestchambers of men were closed to Him; secondary accommodation alone remained wide open.

The élite of Judæa looked on from afar, or gave complimentary feasts from which the heart was absent, as did Simon; or criticized and plotted. The publicans, however, and the harlots, the sinners, and the poor gave Him what welcome they could. They represented the outsiders of society, and with them, as at Bethlehem, the Saviour found a rough kind of hospitality. Speaking generally, from the hour when the world refused the hospitality of the cradle, to the hour when it refused Him the courtesy of a grave, the action of that world towards Him may be summed up in the sentence—"There was no room for Him in the guestchamber."

HOW MEN TREAT CHRIST.

Twenty centuries after that first Christmas, the same thing largely holds true. Our modern life has his guestchambers and its mangers; its honours and its contempts. How rare a thing it is for Jesus to be offered the guestchamber—the best place! Men do not absolutely repudiate Him—no!—but they relegate Him to a corner; He may go again to the manger. He must not be chief amongst the guests.

Take society for example. Will anyone pretend that, with all the fashionable churchgoing and naming of the name of Jesus, there is really a warm, enthusiastic hospitality of the heart offered to Him? Society to-day does not absolutely repudiate Christ, it just tolerates Him. He is merely an ornament—a fashionable figure of speech; a kind of gilt for the decoration of life's shabby places. It is convenient and consoling, nay, "proper," to mention Him once a week, but let no one be so rash as to suggest that He should enter life as its chief guest, whose wishes shall be always heartily carried out. Men do not mind Jesus being somewhere about the premises, manger or elsewhere, but He must not be allowed to enter the guestchamber.

Is it not often so, alas! in the Church? It is not always even amongst those who bear the name of Jesus that he receives thoroughly hearty hospitality. He is often relegated to a corner—being crowded out with pomps and ceremonies and officialism. A lack of glow in public worship, formal and stiff prayers—stately performances which close the soul against free expression, exclusive groups of "select" people, are some of the symptoms which reveal the fact that Jesus is not receiving hospitality in a church.

And in the individual it is also often true. Far too many respect Jesus as Friend, who will have none of Him as absolute Master. He is allowed to visit the life as an occasional caller, but he is not accepted as permanent guest.

Let us ask ourselves, Why is the guestchamber denied Him? There are many reasons, of which only one or two can here be lightly touched upon. For one thing, the guestchamber, in many hearts, is already full. Men are pre-occupied. Place is easily found for anything that concerns our ease, our comforts, our successes, our passions, our prejudices, but for the royal Master of Life, who has the absolute right to the first place in our being, there is no room. Men say they must do this, or that, it is imperative; when will they learn that the dominant "must" in life concerns their relation to the Son of God, and his relation to them? Again, why is the guestchamber closed against Him? Because his worth is unknown. If the owner of that house in Bethlehem had only known WHO He was that was turned from the guestchamber on Christmas night, there would surely have been room made for Him and his mother. And if men only knew to-day who He is that is so persistently refused, whose abiding with us means heaven!

Why is the guestchamber closed against Him? Because his coming into it means the dislodgement of some other guests. This is perhaps the radical reason to-day why Jesus Christ is rejected. For one who refuses Him on intellectual grounds, a hundred refuse Him because of the antagonism of their passions towards Him. Christ cannot be guest in that heart which harbours lust, envy, animalism, vanity, anger, or any other forbidden thing. The spirit of our epoch is materialistic, selfish, animal. To these things Jesus Christ is eternally opposed. When he would enter the heart which harbours them, they must be discharged forthwith. And the heart has to decide whether they go or He goes. Too often it decides in favour of its parasitic guests, driving from its door the rightful Owner and Guest of Life. Behold then, the great reason why Jesus is so little loved to-day.

HOW CHRIST TREATS MEN.

How does Jesus repay men for their inhospitableness? When he entered the world at Bethlehem the guestchamber was closed against Him; just before He quitted the world He took revenge upon it—the revenge of love. On the night of his Passion He sought another guestchamber, which was not refused Him. There He became not guest, but Host. As the sun set upon Jerusalem He instituted a perpetual feast, at which He ever presides—a feast designed to recall to the minds and hearts of his faithful followers a love without parallel. When He entered the world none would have Him as guest; as He quits the world He makes all men his guests, if they will. What Divine retaliation! What a triumph of love! The upper room at Jerusalem is the Divine answer to the miserable manger at Bethlehem.

The two guestchambers—of Bethlehem and of Jerusalem—stand as permanent types of the hearts of men. Every heart has its guestchamber—its place of honour, and into that the Son of God has the right to come and to claim hospitality. But whoever receives Him as guest speedily discovers that the guest becomes host. He brings his own feast with Him. All that the Divine Lord touches becomes sacred and sacramental. Common things, such as bread and wine, develop new meanings under the spell of Jesus. The heart becomes a holy place; the guestchamber is the apartment of the Divine King.

The Coming of the King.

BY HENRY VARLEY.

"WE have seen his Star in the East, and are come to worship Him." So said the Magi of the appearance of Him who was "the Life and the Light of men." Shall they in hallowed faith open their treasures, and present unto the Child-king their gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh, and we hold back our anthems of adoration and praise? O hearts of the sons of men, renewed, sensitive, and tender, break forth into song, sing together of the Father's Holy Child. The Church of God throughout the whole earth joins in the acclamation, "Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

Heaven's description this: Breath of God shaping in human language, centuries before the fulness of the time, the glory of Him whom Isaiah saw. How beautiful upon the mountains of expectation are the winged words of his good tidings! His birth we celebrate, his wondrous incarnation—Him who was "holy, harmless, and undefiled, separate from sinners, made higher than the heavens." Yes, verily, "We hymn thy lofty praise."

"The Only Begotten of the Father." Marvellous description! The Divine personality enshrined in human form. The image of God in man, undefiled and incorruptible. The Divine nature found in absolute perfection in "the firstborn among many brethren." How fair art Thou, surpassing the glory of the noonday sun! We wait thy teaching with expectant joy. "And He opened his mouth and taught them." Let silvern silence wait his golden speech. "Never man spake like this Man." His lips drop sweet-smelling myrrh. The deep things of God inhere in his fulness, and the lengths, breadths, depths, and heights of the eternal love concentrate in the express image "of God's substance." The wilderness life and the solitary heart on earth are glad because of Him. Dark clouds of ignorance and dread of God roll back before the clear shining of his words, "The Father Himself loveth you."

Eargate of the human soul, open wide thy portals. Listen to his matchless wisdom, his glorious testimonies, his familiar talk of eternity. "No man hath seen God at any time. The only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him." Inquire ye the way to God? "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life. No man cometh unto the Father but by Me." "I am come that ye might have life." "He that liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." "I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give my life a ransom for many." "The Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins." "I will, be thou clean." "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." "To-day shalt Thou be with Me in Paradise." "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." Such are some of the notes from the stringed instrument of the sweetest singer in Israel—yea, from the great Author of song Himself.

O Christ of God, how grateful thy teaching! How blessed thy speech! The dirge of life's brief sorrow, the tramp of funereal feet, are heard no more. Thine own majestic words rise distinct and deathless above every wail of grief and cry of the broken heart: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." Great Teacher, keep on; thy mouth is sweet, thy words change Time's requiems into anthems of everlasting song. We heard it from the slopes of Olivet at the instance of heaven's shining ones: "This same Jesus that is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven."

But greater witness than these is ours. Of all the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth, none surpass his promise, "I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Lord Jesus, may we not ask the time of thy return? Do we wait long ere the dark chapters of human sin and discord close? Again the Divine speaker is heard—"Of that day and of that hour knoweth no man;" rest assured, however, that "hereafter ye shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Mark well the words "power and great glory."

Another Christmastide hastens the second advent of the King. A wondrously differing appearance will accompany this coming again—not in weakness, as before, but in power; not as the shining of a Star in the world's dark night of sin, but as the rising of the Sun in the morning of the millennial day; not in a lowly manger with "the beasts of the stall," but from the transcendent glory of the highest heavens. Not then, as the lowly servant of Jehovah, or as the rejected Son of Man, but as King of kings and Lord of lords; not as the suffering Lamb at Calvary, on either side the thieves and Jesus in the midst, but "the Lamb in the midst of the throne." Then shall swell the song of the great company of the redeemed, and the mystery of iniquity shall give place to the manifestation of the sons of God.

"Wonderful."

MEN have had the story of the Incarnation in their hands for many centuries, and have studied and re-studied it till perhaps nothing in the world is more familiar than this event. The words are engraved on their minds even from childhood, so that no part of it can be forgotten; and yet, to a vast extent, there cannot be the least doubt it must remain a mystery to the end of time. Nothing like it has ever occurred. For magnitude, glory and beauty, it surpasses even creation itself.

Language has wearied itself in trying to give a proper description of our Lord Jesus Christ, but has, of course, failed. What it lacks in quality it strives to remedy in quantity, and the titles and comparisons, which are lavished on this glorious and eternal Being, are interminable; but no power of human speech can fully describe the God-Man, and we must be content in this world to know in part till "we shall see Him as He is." We may, however, be consoled by the certainty that all that is necessary for our spiritual good and for our full salvation has been told; and all that is needed is that we should unreservedly "receive Him."

In Holy Scripture the leading and vital doctrines are dealt with in very few words; surely this is significant. It shows that these great truths are best exhibited with but little of the drapery of human language, but should be allowed to stand out in their glorious and dazzling beauty before the astonished gaze of men, and that much language would only spoil the effect. The description of the great birth is brevity itself. Yet who will say that it is not amply sufficient, and who will say that for beauty and spirituality of expression it could possibly be excelled? Such is the account given of the birth of Him who is called "Wonderful."

In studying Scripture, not only must we ponder the sentences, but the very words of the sacred volume. It stands to reason this must be so. Language is but the vehicle of human thought; how can it express the limitless force and infinite meaning of the mind of God? It is for this reason that spiritual study and teaching with illustration are absolutely necessary if men are to instruct as they ought. The title "Wonderful" is a good illustration of what we say. It is used with a meaning so different from anything that is wonderful in this world, that there is no comparison. In this world what is wonderful is very poor and weak indeed, and is usually confined to time and circumstances. What is wonderful now will probably be far eclipsed in the future, and what is wonderful to an ignorant people will be no cause of wonder to a people highly civilized and instructed. It is true there have been wonderful persons and things that have carried down their celebrity through the ages, but all the ages of this transitory world are only for time, and will pass away. Here is a Child spoken of who was to be called "Wonderful" in the most absolute and unrestricted sense of the word. Not only was He to be wonderful in this world, but in heaven itself and for ever. This Child was no less than the Son of God and God Himself.

Why was this Child to be called "Wonderful"? He was the Divine Agent and Exponent of the greatest exhibition of God's mercy and love that has ever occurred, or ever will.

The Incarnation is the keynote of the whole Bible, and runs through it like

A GOLDEN THREAD.

The Pentateuch speaks of it, the inspired Psalmist sang of it, the prophets proclaimed it, the heavenly host gave praise for it, the evangelists described it, and the apostles preached it. In the Revelation we get a glimpse of how it is regarded in heaven. All through this wonderful Book the Saviour is spoken of as the "Lamb," showing the inconceivable glory and value that are placed on Christ's sacrificial work. It is in heaven that Christ is most "wonderful," for He is best understood; and this wonder will be eternal, for it is associated with the eternal and infinite God.

How shall we best show our love and gratitude for this Divine work of redemption and salvation? It has been said that "Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery"; but we would say here that "Imitation is the sincerest form of love, gratitude, and thankfulness," and it is certainly in this way we will please Christ best. His life was not only infinitely great in itself, but it was intended to be a great example. We ought to see that we follow it, however imperfectly we may do so. Our reward will be reckoned, not by the greatness of our work, but by the truth and reality of our love. Christ's life was distinguished by perfect devotion to God's service, and by love and compassion for men's souls and bodies; and in this way we ought to follow his steps. We often complain bitterly of the ill-usage and ingratitude we receive from our fellow-men, but what is this treatment compared with the treatment that Christ received? How can we compare the effect of all this on our sinful spirits with the effect of such on his Divine and Holy Spirit? The comparison is absurd. If we show simple faith and love towards the Incarnate God, and display love and compassion towards our fellow-men, we prove that our Lord's perfect example as regards us has not been thrown away, but that we are following in the heavenly path of Him who is "the Way, the Truth, and the Life." Homeward Bound.

Psalm xc. 1, R.V.

HOMEWARD bound, the message winging,
Comes to all, both far and wide;
Ship and train from far are bringing
Dear ones home for Christmastide.

Home from school the children merry,
Home the loved from far and near,
Greeting Yuletide's leaf and berry,
Joining in the Christmas cheer.

Home from toil, from hardships weary,
From ambition's toilsome path,
Young and old midst welcomes cheery
Gather round the Christmas hearth.

Homeward bound, O boy and maiden,
Come to Bethlehem—come away:
God with gifts Life's tree has laden,
For you on his natal day.

Homeward bound, O worn and hoary,
In the East unshadowed dawn,
Listen to the Christmas story,
When the Infant Christ was born.

Homeward bound, how sweet the greeting
On the spirit's natal shore!
Where the loved with loved are meeting
Christmas welcomes evermore.

Where the angel choirs singing
Lead our feet life's stream beside,
And the joy-bells ever ringing
Make eternal Christmastide!

Christmas Poems.

"Peace on Earth."

CHRISTMAS is here with its tidings of gladness,
Bringing its message once more to our mind;
Telling of "Glory to God in the Highest,
Peace upon earth and goodwill to mankind."

Peace! What a beautiful word you have spoken!
Peace after storm, after suff'ring and strife;
Like the sweet sunlight that scatters the darkness,
Waking the earth into beauty and life.

Peace between man and the God he's offended;
Peace between man and the man he has wronged;
Peace in man's soul, passing all understanding;
Peace for which earth many ages has longed.

Calm are the billows that just now are raging,
Hush'd are the winds when He bids them be still;
Softly the moonbeams steal over the waters,
Swiftly the storm-clouds disperse at his will.

Peace! 'Twas the promise announced at his coming;
Peace was his purpose, most clearly defined;
Peace was the angel that followed his footsteps;
Peace was his legacy left to mankind.

Hushed be the din and commotion of battle,
Roaring of guns and the clash of the sword;
Lay down your weapons one moment and listen.
"Peace upon earth!" 'Tis the Word of the Lord.

This, O ye men, is the message of Christmas!
This, O my heart, is God's message to thee!
Have I an enemy? Love and forgive him;
Goodwill to all in my heart there should be.

Peace, perfect peace, mid the storms of temptation;
Peace, perfect peace, mid life's whirlwind and rush;
Murmured repinings, bewildered heart-cryings,
All may be soothed by his wonderful "Hush!"

Peace in our hearts and our homes and our nation,
"Peace upon earth"—'tis his message and word;
This is his gift to us all for this Christmas;
This, O my soul, is the will of the Lord!

EDITH GREEVES.

The Coming of the King.

AT the breaking of the morning ere ye see the rising sun,
Have ye marked the herald splendour, telling of the Coming One
Tint the valley with its radiance, light the dark, cold, restless sea,
Gild the hillsides, ere the coming of the day that is to be?

So the Lord our God ariseth on the darkness of our night,
And our face He doth illumine ere men see the source of light;
And our vale of doubt and sadness with his advent glory thrills,
And our tossing sea is quiet 'neath the glow of holy hills.

When the sun is right above us in the fulness of the day,
At the splendour of its glory all the shadows flee away;
Flowers are painted by its radiance, fruit to ripe perfection grows,
And the river from the mountain filleth with the melting snows.

So when Christ shines full upon us all our darkness flies away,
And his light and warmth and cleansing brings a bright and cloudless day;
And abiding in his sunshine fruit to Him and flowers appear,
While through us flow living waters, like a river full and clear.

In the sweetness of the evening when the birds are almost still,
And the sun is slowly sinking, leaving glory on the hill;
When man from his toil and labour turneth at the cool of day,
And God talketh to his children and we cannot choose but pray—

So the peace that Jesus bringeth, like the welcome evening hour,
Calm that nought of earth e'er giveth, full of rest and secret power;
So his voice is very tender, "Come to Me and be at rest,"
And his yoke becometh easy, and his burden light and blest.

Neylands, Warley. F. C. CAREY LONGMORE.

Elijah: The Prophet of all Time.

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A., Rector of All Souls, Langham Place, W.

V.—A Good Man Sore Afraid.

TRULY those whom God hides are well hidden. For nearly three years the prophet was sheltered in the little house at Zarephath. Though Ahab had sent to every nation and kingdom to discover him, even taking an oath of the rulers that Elijah was not sheltered in their dominions, he had been unable to find him. He was completely baffled. Three and a half years had passed, and no tidings of the prophet's whereabouts had reached him.

But the day of release was at hand. God was about to send rain upon the earth. This could only be at the word of Elijah, for so Elijah, acting at God's word throughout, had declared. If rain came without any announcement by the prophet, Ahab would take it as a triumph of the prophets of Baal and their mediations. It was absolutely necessary that Elijah should meet Ahab once more, and let him know by whose mercy alone the judgment was being turned aside. So the word of the Lord came to Elijah, "Go show thyself unto Ahab, and I will send rain upon the earth."

At once Elijah obeyed. Some of the most heroic acts of obedience are also of the simplest and everyday type. The Lord had said go, and Elijah went. That is all. But that was everything. We might have read, "and Elijah hesitated, objected to the plan, excused himself." It seemed to be courting disaster, putting his head into a veritable lion's den, to leave Zarephath and face the wrath of King Ahab and the fierce Jezebel. But Elijah never wavered.

THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

This time there was no special word of protection for Elijah. It was not said, "I will hide thee; I have commanded one of my servants to shelter and help thee." The assurance was not needed. Elijah could take that for granted even as he took it for granted that the meal and oil would not fail. There was, however, a word of deliverance for Israel. Elijah, as he hid in his heart the promise: "I will send rain upon the earth," would seem to tread the air in the intoxication of delight. And this, too, was an answer to his prayers.

So St. James tells us "He prayed again; and the heaven gave rain and the earth brought forth her fruit." The reference is, of course, to the prayer on Mount Carmel, but had there not been prayer, frequent agonizing prayer, before that? Then for the first time he prayed with the assurance of an immediate answer, but for many months past one unceasing cry for mercy on Israel had been rising from his heart. It began, perhaps, when he first left the shelter of Cherith, and had burnt into his own soul a sense of the misery and sufferings of the nation. And yet he knew that sin must be put away before judgment could be turned aside. Perhaps the death of the widow's son was the beginning of God's answer to his prayers. In that one concrete instance he realized that judgment must overtake sin before the sinner can be brought into the full knowledge of God. Nor could he hope that in the case of the apostate nation the bitterness of judgment would so soon be turned into the joy of resurrection life. In some dim shadowy way Elijah must have realized that something like the terrible tragedy on Mount Carmel would be necessary before God could again send rain upon the earth.

Both these convictions would be deepened as he journeyed southward to Jezreel. His heart would ache as he saw the fatal consequences of the three-and-a-half years drought. The green pastures and still waters of which David sang were now hard and dry. The fig-trees no longer blossomed, the labour of the olive failed. The sickles hung unused on the granary door, and the vintage shoutings had ceased. And across his path flitted skeleton forms with fierce looks of hunger and deep sunken eyes. But as he passed through he would look, oh, so anxiously, for any signs of repentance. Was the nation humbled or defiant? Were they ashamed of their idolatry, or were they angry with God? There were seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal, and for their sakes wrath had given place to mercy, but Elijah seems to have known nothing about them.

And where repentance was most needed there was none. We have a glimpse at what Ahab and Jezebel were interested in—Jezebel in the extermination of the prophets of Jehovah, Ahab in the saving of his beasts. Yes, the king and his royal chamberlain were seeking grass to save the royal cattle. They were not seeking the Lord and his mercy; they were not anxious to save the distressed and famine-stricken nation. And yet Ahab was not wholly bad. He had a care for his dumb cattle, and he retained a true man of God as head over his household. "Obadiah feared the Lord greatly," says the inspired chronicler, emphasizing the man's personal piety and brave and disinterested care for the hunted prophets of the Lord as though he knew that Obadiah would not appear to advantage in the narrative that followed.

THE VALUE OF TRUE RELIGION.

It is not likely that Obadiah's loyalty to Jehovah was concealed or unknown. We do the man a great injustice if we represent him as a time-server, or one who subordinated conscience to convenience, and principle to policy. He feared the Lord greatly. He had feared Him from his youth. He had risked expulsion and death by his protection of the Lord's prophets. He doubtless found it far from agreeable to abide in his calling at the court of Samaria, but that did not justify him in leaving it, and very likely Ahab was not willing to release him. Jezebel would have made short work of Obadiah if she had had her way. But Ahab was not quite such a blind bigot. There was an element of sanity in his wickedness. He knew the value of a good servant. Just as when Joseph was advanced by Pharaoh and Daniel by Nebuchadnezzar and Darius, so Ahab is glad to retain an Obadiah over his household. Even wicked men pay homage sometimes to the value of true religion.

Nicholas Biddle, it is said, once had for a private secretary a Christian young man whom he wished to keep at work on the Sabbath. The secretary objected to working on the Lord's Day. "I shall discharge you," said his employer, "if you do not conform to my wishes." The secretary was poor, and had, moreover, a widowed mother depending upon him; but rather than violate his conscience he gave up the place. A day or two after, Mr. Biddle was in the company of some gentlemen who were about to start a new bank, and were in difficulty as to how to find a suitable man to be its cashier. Mr. Biddle at once recommended his late secretary, saying, "He has too much conscience for my work, but none too much for the more responsible office you have to offer." And the young man was appointed.

But Obadiah, true man of God as he was, did not show a very courageous spirit on this occasion. It is said of the righteous, "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings; his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord." Obadiah, however, conjures up grave perils entirely from his own imaginations. Elijah had been sent, in answer to the many prayers of Obadiah and others, to announce that God would send rain upon the earth. Instead of recognising that the advent of Elijah meant mercy and deliverance for Israel, Obadiah is consumed with needless fears as to his own personal safety. The man who had hidden a hundred of the Lord's prophets, and had risked his life a thousand times on their behalf, is now afraid to carry a message to Elijah, though that message was really the prelude to God's blessing upon Israel. It is not for us, however, to throw stones at Obadiah. Many who meet real dangers bravely are often tormented with fear over imaginary difficulties. How often good has looked like evil, and we have given way to murmuring and alarm when we ought to have been praising God for answering prayer.

This fear made Obadiah lose all self-control. It was not vainglory that made him prate in such an unseemly way about his good deeds. It was sheer fright. Perhaps he had forgotten or hurried over his morning prayer and meditation. Perhaps the sad errand he was on had made him feel that Ahab's vengeance would be stirred beyond all restraint. Anyhow, we learn the lesson that faith is never very far removed from doubt, and that fear dogs the steps of even the most courageous. The Master's words, "Fear not, only believe," need to be continually before us; for if once faith fails, fear triumphs; and fear may make a true servant of God behave in an unseemly and discreditable fashion.

International Bible-Reading Association.

A SOCIETY which renews its enrolment annually, and yet adds 50,000 members in one year, may be taken to need little recommendation; and this is the record of the International Bible-Reading Association for the past twelve months. Commenced in 1882, there is now a membership of 750,000, which is represented in all parts of the world. The system of reading adopted is the typical one, and its promoters claim for it special adaptation to the needs of Sunday-school teachers and scholars, as well as other busy people who desire a course of reading which shall be conducive to thought and helpful in daily life.

There are so many distractions in the present day, and so much seeking for "something new," that the Bible is too often forgotten and practically forsaken. There is need, therefore, for all the efforts to promote Bible reading, and a wide field yet to be worked. The I.B.R.A. has proved its usefulness in many and varied circumstances, and its more than 8,000 voluntary workers are able to testify as to many cases of definite conversion among the members as results of the daily reading. Only on Sunday last, in an East London Nonconformist Church, a young person was received into fellowship on a statement which altogether testifies to the value of this scheme. She had for some years been reading the daily portion, and had learned of the Saviour thereby, and realized her acceptance with God. The same could be said in many other cases.

Where a "branch" is formed the nominal subscription of one penny for the year from each member is all that is required. Much good has been done by the short "hints" on each day's reading, which are supplied to members in addition to the annual certificate of membership. The association has not only spread into many countries where the English language is spoken, but its lists are printed in thirty different languages, so that its members form a very interesting body of all ages, denominations, and many countries and languages. Fuller information will be sent post free to any part of the world. Address, the Hon. Sec., I.B.R.A., 56, Old Bailey, London, E.C.

For Dinnerless Children.

THE hon. secretary of the Board School Children's Free Dinner Fund, Miss Anna Pennington, writes:—"Much serious illness has prevailed amongst children this autumn. To many of these, returning to school in poor neighbourhoods, the good, nourishing meal this Society provides is of the greatest service."

Some of the children, as the report shows, are in circumstances of keen distress, and their need is emphasized by the fact that in addition to attending school they engage in various kinds of work out of school hours. "One case of a young girl had this note attached to it: 'Out with little brother at 5 a.m. selling newspapers.' She goes to Poplar Station to sell her papers to the workmen as they come in by the workmen's trains. She has done this, all weathers, through the winter. She is a fair scholar, and a nice bright girl. Nellie will take you to her home if you like to go. Nellie was a wholesome, even pretty-looking girl, with the promise of a capable woman. But what a home it was she came from! Nothing could be more deplorable."

The report, a copy of which may be had on application to Miss Pennington, gives instances of suffering which are sure to call forth the earnest sympathy of Christian readers. Special attention is paid by the workers to the children of poor widows.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, December 22. 1 Peter iv.

THIS is the Epistle of suffering. From first to last it is full of references which have solaced the hearts of sufferers in all the ages. The Apostle refers to the Prince of all Sufferers, whose unknown sufferings were of a kind which none of us can fully experience, though they enabled Him to become our sympathizing High Priest. Take up your cross and follow Him; place your feet in his footprints flecked with blood; put on his thoughts of devotion to God's will as an armour against all the soft solicitation of the flesh. Be as one who is dead to the world, and live according to God in the spirit.

The final breaking up of the Jewish State was near. The signs and sounds of dissolution were everywhere. What need, therefore, to be sober, to watch and pray? Ah, Peter, thou art warning us from thine own bitter experience! It is thus that the strong yields sweetness, and out of the eater comes meat.

In the remainder of the chapter, from the eighth verse and onwards, we have the believer in his social relations, fervent in his love, forgiving in his dealings with offenders, and ungrudging in his hospitality (8, 9): the believer in the church, ministering of his gifts of grace, speaking God's truth in God's strength (10, 11): the believer in the midst of the fiery furnace of pain, and exhortations are given as to the cause for which, and the temper in which, he is to suffer. Suffering must come to all, and let us not flinch from it, for if it come for Jesus' sake, and is borne in his spirit, it brings a Divine benediction—"Blessed are ye" (12-19). The God who created you will be faithful to the nature which He gave, and the hopes He has inspired.

MONDAY, December 23. 1 Peter v.

The Apostle is back again at the cross. Though more than thirty years had passed since he stood afar off, and saw his Master die, the scene was as vivid as if it had been but yesterday; and his hope was sure and certain, that his enjoyment of the everlasting crown would be equally vivid and real. The R.V. brings out the fact that he felt himself to be already partaking of the glory—who am (1).

Yes, and he was standing again on the silver strand of Galilee, whilst the Master charged him to feed his flock. This charge he passes on to the elders, the presbyters of the Church, urging them to do it willingly and freely, in view of the crown of glory, which can never fade away.

Ah, how these memories crowd upon him. Before his eyes there comes again the scene of the upper room, which was indelibly impressed on his soul, where the Master laid aside his garments, that He might clothe Himself with humility; and girded Himself with a towel, that He might perform the lowliest and most menial office for those whom He loved to the end. Humility has a sweetness to him now, that it had not in those old days, when he strove for pre-eminence among his fellow-apostles (6). And vigilance against the wiles of the devil was a fresh urgency now, as he recalled what a defaulter he had been in watching.

Let us ponder well verse 10. We have been called by the grace of God Himself. Our destiny is his eternal glory, and nothing less. Suffering is only for a while at the longest. God will some day put the top-stone on the structure of our character; meanwhile, He will stablish, strengthen, and settle those who trust in Him.

TUESDAY, December 24. 2 Peter i.

The Apostle is fond of the word precious, applying it to the Blood, to the Living Stone, to the Saviour, and to Faith. Faith is priceless in its worth, because its open hand gathers the unsearchable treasures of God. It is God's gift, and is to be obtained. Are you willing to have it? Then take it freely. There are many references also to our God (or Lord) and Saviour (1, 2, 11; ii. 20; iii. 18). Another key-word, especially in this chapter, is these things.

This chapter abounds in rich stores for meditation. All things that pertain to a living and godly experience are ours in the risen Christ, and may be received by faith, through the knowledge of God (3). Our nature may actually share and partake of the Divine; and the more we know and appropriate the promises, the deeper and richer will our experience become (4). It is possible to escape the corruption that is in the world as we wrap ourselves about with the antiseptic of the Divine nature (4). Study also the golden ladder of verses 5, 6, and 7. Or look upon the enumeration of graces under the image of those Japanese boxes, which contain each other, till you reach, in the innermost and smallest, some rare and perfect jewel. Or, consider them (as the Greek implies) like a radiant choir, all of the voices being requisite to make the perfect strain of music. And mark the incentive presented to diligence in the culture of this sisterhood—it is only thus that our entrance into the everlasting kingdom shall be abundant with rejoicing (11).

There are three reassuring considerations to close with. The apostles' distinct and decisive testimony to what they beheld; the self-evident word of truth, as we have it in the Scriptures, written by men who were borne along by the Divine Spirit; and the anticipation that we shall soon behold the Day-Star, shining on the bosom of the eternal morn.

WEDNESDAY, December 25. 2 Peter ii.

What a phrase is here—"denying even the Master that bought them!" Ah, soul, thou wilt never thrive till thou dost admit that thou hast no claim on thyself, since thou art the purchased serf of Christ; and thou must obey his loving and wise despotism. So shalt thou be kept from the paths of the destroyer, and delivered from the heresies that fill the air.

Awful, indeed, will be the fate of those who have misled others! In fearful images they are described in those terrible chapters. They are compared to brute beasts, as not able to cease from sin, as following in the steps of Balaam, like the mirage of the desert, like the well-pit without the living spring, like the clouds that hurry before the storm-wind but drop no moisture on the earth. For such the mist of darkness is reserved for ever. Alas for them; but let us beware. The most spiritual faculties very often co-exist with the most carnal and unclean tendencies and appetites. Those who are capable of ascending to the most glorious heights are also capable of descending to the most shameful depths. There are few passages in Scripture more searching than verse 19.

But amid all these awful examples of failure and apostasy—of fallen angels (4), destroyed cities (6), and even of a destroyed world (5)—it is possible for God's saints to be kept from falling. He who saved Lot can save us. Only let us, like Lot, be willing to heed the Divine voice and obey.

THURSDAY, December 26. 2 Peter iii.

Peter does not hesitate to place the commandments of himself and the other apostles of Jesus on a level with the words of the holy prophets, and he repeats his admonitions because of their absolute importance. Apparently there was fear lest the Church should relax her attitude of expectancy, giving credence to the materialistic philosophy of the time.

Men argued then, as they do now, from the unbroken continuity of natural causes, the regular routine of cause and effect, the reign of law. They did not realize that there had been, from time to time, the intrusion of a higher law into the ordinary course of events, which had put a temporary arrest upon their action and interaction. For instance, there was once the Flood, and there had always been miracles. Why, then, should not the ordinary course of nature be broken in upon by the Second Advent, when the Lord Jesus should gather his saints about Him, and reign with them gloriously? What God has done once He can do again.

But who can set the times and seasons? Who can advise the Almighty? Who can read his mystic handwriting? The times and seasons belong to Him alone. For us there is but one attitude—to watch, to be holy and godly, to be diligent that we may be found of Him in peace, without spot and blameless. And remember that one day is with the Lord as 1,000 years; He can do as much in twenty-four hours as all our missionaries can do in 1,000 years. To Him 1,000 years are as one day—they are to Him only what a day seems to us:—it was only in the morning of yesterday that Jesus was crucified, according to heaven's chronology.

FRIDAY, December 27. John i.

Life; Light; Love—these are the three dominant notes in the symphony of St. John. The two first are in this chapter, the last is in the next, but it pervades the book.

In the introduction (1-4), the Apostle recalls his own blessed experiences of the bosom of Christ. He had seen, beheld with penetrating scrutiny of insight, touched and handled. There could have been no mistake. He had had the evidence of his senses. Like his beloved brother Peter, he could affirm that he had not followed cunningly-devised fables when he declared "the power and presence of the Lord." But his testimony did not refer to the past alone—it was a living, bright reality. He was still enjoying that fellowship (and the word might be rendered comradeship and co-partnership); and beckoned all whom he loved to come and share it with him.

In the message (5, &c.), he insists on the absolute purity, spirituality, and all-revealing character of God. What light is to the natural world—gentle, pure, all-pervasive, free to every eye, falling alike on the evil and the good, on the lowly-thatched cottage, and the palace—God is to the spiritual. He clothes Himself with light as with a garment. He is not only the sun, but the atmosphere: not only the star, but the far-travelled ray. To walk with Him demands that our lives also should be gentle, humble, pure, and uncompromising as light is. You confess that you are far from this, and that imperfection is constantly marring your testimony and walk. You wonder how the holy God can suffer you in his near proximity! But you must remember that Christ's blood goes on cleansing, securing deliverance from sin's penalty, and proving it to be the antiseptic of sin's power.

Notice there are three things we are not to say, lest we lie (If we say, 6, 8, ii. 1), and three we may affirm (7, 9, ii. 1).

SATURDAY, December 28. John ii.

"Little children!" (1, 12, 13, 18, 28). Note also the recurring phrase, "I write" (1, 7, 12, 13, 14, 21). Consider the titles for our Lord—the Paraclete or Advocate, who pleads for us at the throne of mercy; the Propitiation, on whom the Shekinah burns, as of old, in the most holy place; the Holy One, who anoints with the sacred chrism of the Holy Spirit; the Son, who is for ever one with the Father and of equal Deity; and the Coming One, before whom we shall all be manifested.

Follow out the word abide. We may say that we are abiding in Him, yet deceive ourselves (6). The truth of our abiding is attested by our walk (6); we abide in Christ by letting his word abide in us (24); to abide in the Son is to abide in the Father (24); the Holy Spirit will teach us how to abide (27); abiding in Him here and now, is the one condition of not being ashamed before Him at last.

Notice that love is light, and hatred darkness, and that our relation to our brother reveals our real selves and relationship to God. Little children, fathers, and young men, after all, need the same truths. Christian experience is a spiral staircase: it is ever returning to the same view-point, but from a higher level.

"The world" is the maya of the Hindoo, an illusion, a mirage, a promise which is not fulfilled, an ignis fatuus, a false light shining for a moment from the rock-bound dark-veiled coast. Set your heart on the love of God, that it may extirpate the love of the world, which is itself evanescent, whilst the power of enjoying it is still more so.

On Mr. Moody's grave at Northfield these words are engraved: "He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever"—and this is true of him and of all God's saints.

The Late Rev. James Wall,

BAPTIST MISSIONARY TO ITALY.

THE object of this notice is not to describe a long missionary career, crowned by great blessing and extended influence, but to give a brief sketch of a remarkable character before its memory fades, or imagination may distort the natural features of a life that was full of noble deeds.

To come into contact with some men is to discover a moral force, and to observe their influence over others whom they meet for the first time is to read the hidden strength of their personality. There are many who have thus learned to admire this ardent missionary who, without any effort to cultivate acquaintances, had made his name a familiar word among the churches, and his cause so dear to many Christian hearts. He was a man of great faith, and therefore independent of others whenever convinced of the duty which lay before him. He refused no responsibility, and much as it might weigh upon him, he ever struggled to meet it. The sincerity of his heart even laid him open to the artfulness of deceivers; but the discovery of their hypocrisy never brought him to that low level of suspicion which is the first symptom of despair.

James Wall preferred risk and loss to lack of faith in those dependent upon him, and his trust has been the highest favour and the best education of not a few whom he has trained for Christian service. "Noblesse oblige" was a motto he often quoted, and it doubtless contributed to his influence over men. To missionaries who are acquainted with the difficult problem of native agents this feature will appeal in all its force. It was this simplicity which made him so attractive to little children, and in his relationships with them the love of a strong and aged man was never tempered by any sense of fear or timidity.

To those who knew him, Mr. Wall always appeared an accomplished gentleman, in spite of his humble parentage. His courtesy was free from every artifice of society; but a constant attention to the comfort and pleasure of those around him, united with a natural yet dignified manner of speaking, tended to remove any sense of distance or estrangement; hence to numerous visitors of the Eternal City he became more than an acquaintance, an intimate friend. Few, indeed, could even guess his achievements in the pursuit of knowledge. Although almost unacquainted with schools and colleges, his physical strength as a young man enabled him to undertake the most strenuous studies simultaneously with constant activity in work. He would often smile when some American friend would style him Dr. Wall; he was never more than a student, but he was a student to the end.

Reading by night was with him a constant habit; the daytime was for work, the hours of night were often stolen from sleep for personal study. Latin and Greek Fathers, the ancient classics, works of philosophy, science and history, volumes in French, German, Italian, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, thus took their turn at his bedside, and were equally the objects of his careful study. His library, to which he sacrificed no small part of his surplus income, depriving himself of other comforts, would tell at a glance the extraordinary range of his information, while the special course of etymology, to which he had devoted himself with delight during the last years of his life, demonstrate the attraction which studies of deep erudition ever exercised over his mind.

Unfortunately constant pressure of work, and an early translation to higher service, excluded his producing any literary work. He, nevertheless, printed two new editions of the Italian New Testament, and also the Epistle to the Romans; for, in spite of most varied reading, the knowledge of Holy Scripture was his chief attraction. It was in the Bible that he had discovered his life work, and to the Bible he ever looked for constant guidance, as well as final victory. Bible work he believed in more than any other work, and often has he remarked that while other branches of mission effort had only been at times supported at the cost of great exertion and sacrifice, he had never failed to obtain funds necessary for the distribution and circulation of the Scriptures.

As an evangelist Mr. Wall possessed a remarkable appeal to the conscience, together with an unceasing desire for the salvation of souls. As a young man his earnestness and solemnity inpressed all who heard him, and on his last visit to England, he had the joy of meeting an old man who was converted by his open-air preaching at Worcester when he was little more than a boy. With riper years he appealed also strongly to the understanding, and occasionally indulged in powerful arguments of controversy; but he always preserved his wonderful contact with the ignorant and simple, striving only to drive home the truth of an omnipotent and ever-living Saviour.

To those who knew him, it appears almost incredible that Mr. Wall should have been charged with extravagant abuse of Rome, for he was no bigot. In touch with Christians of all denominations, he was ever ready to appreciate any true and spiritual teaching, and often did he tell of light received while studying not a few of the Greek and Latin Fathers. His language, however, was intentionally strong in the condemnation of a system in which he saw a constant danger to civil and religious progress. Not against the men, but against false doctrine and dishonest practice he would protest with all the energy of his tongue and pen. On the other hand, the love of the Church of England in which he was himself led to Christ, and the terrible evidence of its present degradation at the hands of Romanizing priests, called forth a frequent warning from one who, through long experience and personal observation, felt himself in a position to give an opinion of Romanism as it is.

With James Wall the demolishing of idolatrous superstition was only clearing the ground for the construction of Evangelical liberty and truth. It is safe to say that since going to Italy, in 1863, he lost no opportunity of extending the witness of the Gospel, visiting all manner of places, speaking with every kind of introduction, exerting all his ingenuity for mission purposes, placing the Scriptures in hundreds of thousands of homes. From the Alps to Sicily he travelled, even in dangerous times. On the highest peak of the Appennines he was proud to deposit a copy of the Word of Life. In the seas and rivers he baptized again and again upon the confession of faith.

Inside Roman Catholic churches, as well as in the streets and squares of many towns and cities, our departed friend raised his voice without fear in defence of the truth. He was a man of one purpose, and he held to it unto the end. But when all is told, his faith, his devotion, his patience, and his success—when his character is revealed and its influence fully realised—it is only as the portrait of one whom we mourn, "not lost, but gone before," a portrait which tells of earth's likeness, but cannot even shadow forth those grand features which are revealed in the great Beyond.

Faithful in small things, James Wall knew that he was only saved through the grace of God in Christ. Now he is gone before; but again we shall see him—when we too awake in Christ's likeness. We commend to the earnest prayers of our readers his devoted wife and family, who were true helpmeets to him in his work.

Birthplace of William Farel.

AN appeal to which a peculiar interest attaches is at present being made on behalf of the Protestant cause in the French town of Gap, where William Farel was born. The preaching of the Gospel has for a generation been carried on under the auspices of the committee which the venerated Prof. Frederic Godet founded at Neuchâtel, for the evangelization of France, after the disasters of 1870-71. At that time the pastor of the village of St. Laurent-du-Cros gave his services to the congregation at Gap, and the local deacons sent a petition to the committee in answer to which the station was placed on a definite basis.

But though the resources at the disposal of the committee admitted of the appointment of a pastor, no provision could be made for the erection of a church. Four or five different meeting places have been used, and the altered shop where the services are present held is quite inadequate. The cause has prospered so that the thirty or forty Protestants have grown to 200; and an appeal is made to Christians elsewhere to contribute £1,000 or £1,200 which would provide a modest church and parsonage. It is felt that this would be a fitting memorial of the great French reformer; and among the numerous signatories we find the names of Pastor Brugière (Marseilles), Professor Doumergue (Montauban), Professor G. Godet (Neuchatél), and Pastor H. Monod (Lyons).

The French pastors in London heartily endorse the appeal, on behalf of which Mr. A. Brown, president of the French Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, Strand, will gladly answer inquiries.

THE LATE

Mrs. Anna Shipton.

OF those who have received spiritual help and blessing through the writings of Anna Shipton, not a few are hoping for the publication of details which may enable them to know more of a life lived in unbroken communion with the risen Christ, and therefore a life of fruitful though secluded service.

Her own wishes in regard to any personal reference were conveyed to the writer in the following words: "I would rather there was no memoir of a life that only the Lord can read or understand; it reads to me as only mistakes and misunderstandings, full of thorns and thistles."

This expression of her wishes is not only a seal, but also a key, enabling us to solve the secret of the blessing which rests upon her writings. Persuaded beyond doubt that a life of sorrow, of suffering, and loneliness was the life marked out and prepared for her by unerring Wisdom, she accepted it with a clear perception of God's will in regard to her appointed service. The solitary way made room for Emmanuel, and the drooping spirit of many a lonely one was revived as she told out "the secret of the Lord," the abiding presence and companionship of Jesus, a living personal Friend.

Of sorrow a full cup was given her; of physical suffering a portion which falls to the lot of but a few; of trial in the shape of misunderstanding and scorn more perhaps than to the generality of those "who will live godly in Christ Jesus." In all she traced his hand and heard his voice. In the fire she saw the likeness of the Son of God, and sang of Him. No wonder, therefore, that the pile of letters, carefully gathered and preserved by her own hand, some faded with years, others of more recent date, from persons in the humblest as well as the higher walks in life, breathe out gratitude and praise to God for comfort, quickening, and light to the soul conveyed through her books. These testimonies were to her most precious and treasured.

The power which accompanied her writings lay in the fact that they led the seeking soul directly to the Living Source and to the Written Word. The very title of the earliest of her works was the means of blessing to one who, in a moment of sudden and imminent danger, remembered that the title of a little volume which had been given to her was "Tell Jesus." The cry to the ever-present One led to instant deliverance, and also to an abiding dependence on Him as "God with us." The dedication of another book to the risen and exalted Son of God, the Lord of glory, was the means used by the Holy Spirit to arrest a wanderer, as he gazed upon the page, and to lead him out of the darkness and chill of atheism into the light of the knowledge of God in Christ.

The writer of this brief sketch is one among the many who owe an eternal debt of gratitude to Anna Shipton, for it was her hand that opened the door and brought Jesus Himself into a soul shrouded in earth-clouds, yet struggling to be free; and it was her voice which, in the years that followed, cheered and encouraged in service for the Master. This help came through her books, for years passed before the beloved authoress was known face to face.

As a writer, Mrs. Shipton outlived her contemporaries. She also saw nearly all her early friends pass away; Mr. R. Cope Morgan, among the remaining few, was one whose valued friendship and counsel were of increasing comfort as she advanced in years.

Some who loved her have suggested a memorial, and those who knew her best feel that the most fitting memorial would be to keep her books in circulation. Nothing rejoiced her own heart more than to hear that God continued to use them as his messengers; and until the day of her departure, from far and near, she heard of instances of blessing through them. Translated into other languages, they have gone out into all parts of the world.

That some had passed into the great field-hospitals during the war in South Africa, and had ministered comfort and peace to the sick and the wounded, was to her glad news. Circulated among the Christian soldiers in a large convalescent camp, more than one acknowledged, in the words of a newly-converted comrade, "No better book than this—'The Secret of the Lord'—could be put into the hands of a young Christian."

The thought with reference to the circulation of the books will doubtless commend itself to all. Mrs. Shipton's publishers are prepared to make liberal arrangements for this; it only remains for those who love her memory to suggest the best method for carrying out the plan. Any proposal from them will be acceptable, and will be carefully considered.

THE LATE MRS. ANNA SHIPTON.
From a Photograph taken about 1880.

Many who value Anna Shipton as a prose-writer do not know her poetry, of which three volumes have been published. Some of her poems are of exquisite sweetness, as well as deep spirituality. One is given here which will find an echo in the heart of every true follower of the Master she loved and served so well.

ALPHA AND OMEGA.

"I am Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely" (Rev. xxi. 6).

O LAMB of God, I know that Thou art here!
Close as my clasping hands—nay, yet more near;
And every sigh enters thy gracious ear.
I ask to see
More of Thyself, Lord Jesus; more of Thee.

Give me to walk with girded garments white;
The understanding heart, to read aright
Thy Word; thy law, thy will, my soul's delight,
That I may be
More like Thyself, Lord Jesus; more like Thee.

Grant me thy Spirit's might to bring the blind
To thy dear feet, thy light and peace to find,
And sin-forged fetters from the dead unbind;
I ask to be
More like Thyself, Lord Jesus; more like Thee!

Grant me a ministry that Thou shalt bless;
Give me Thy comfort for the comfortless,
And self-forgetful in each heart's distress.
Oh, grant to me
More of Thyself, Lord Jesus; more of Thee!

Give me a baptism of glowing love,
Thy power and presence wheresoe'er I rove;
And my last prayer, all other prayers above—
Oh, give to me
More of Thyself, Lord Jesus; more of Thee!

Her own words must close this imperfect sketch. The evening preceding the sudden early-morning home-call, she said, "I think I am dying; I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness. His likeness—how lovely!"

King Edward Schools and Mission.

THE Marquess of Northampton presided a few days ago at the annual meeting of the King Edward Ragged Schools, Institute, and Mission. These Schools were started early in the reign of the late Queen by gathering a few children at a cottage; then more extended accommodation was provided in a disused stable; but at the present time the needs of the work are scarcely met by two spacious buildings—one station being in King Edward Street, and one still larger in Albert Street.

The year's report, as read by Mr. C. Montague, who has been hon. secretary and superintendent for more than thirty years, showed that there were 1,500 children in the Sunday schools, the teachers regarding their scholars as the hope of the future. The Bible classes are also prosperous; while a Bible Reading Association numbers 540 members. The well-attended prayer meetings were a symptom of earnest religious life, and the conductors rejoice to find that so many young men and women are attracted. In addition to the Sunday services, there are weekly meetings for children. Industrial classes for the benefit of young girls include cooking and dressmaking. Boys were taught carpentry, fretwork, &c., which proved of great advantage to them.

As there were some whom it is necessary to assist in a temporal way, free dinners are given to poor children, and a lady who has seen these herself undertook to pay for meals for old people. The mothers' meetings have been a success, while the women's Bible class has shown uninterrupted progress from the first. The men's Bible class was quite as large, and was mainly composed of working men. One of the chief enterprises of the year had been the putting up of a holiday home at Sandon, near Chelmsford—the cost, including the freehold site, being £2,500. Mr. Montague added some details concerning the work of the Benevolent Society, the members of which visit the sick in and about Spitalfields. The income for the year was £3,101, and there was a balance in hand. Addresses were given by Rev. G. A. Suttle (Whitefield's Tabernacle), Rev. J. G. Rogers, Messrs. J. G. Johnson, John Kirk, and others.

Morley Hall, W.—The last of the series of meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life will be held on Thursday, December 19, when Rev. Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh, will give the address. The meeting is at 3.30 p.m., in the Morley Hall, 26, George Street, Hanover Square. A new series will commence on Thursday, January 23, when Prebendary Webb-Peploe will be the speaker. The Bishop of Durham has kindly promised (Diocesan duties permitting) to take the address on March 13.

Other Lands.

In Southern Russia.

VIII.—The Power Behind the Throne.

THE Russian subject always speaks of the Emperor with affection. He is the embodiment of law and authority. The portraits of the Czar and the Czarina adorn the walls of nearly every home. And even if, as alleged, this is by command, it is one that is cheerfully obeyed. The birthdays and name-days of the chief members of the Royal Household are Crown-holidays, on which every manner of unnecessary work is forbidden. Russia is almost more burdened with holidays than the Roman Catholic countries.

While the Emperor is the head figure, the Church is the real ruler. No Luther has yet risen to loosen the firm grasp in which this organization holds the State and nation of Holy Russia. The Greek Church was introduced by Greek monks in 988, under the Grand Duke Vladimir I., who, after being baptized at Korssur, near Sebastopol, commanded all his subjects to be baptized en masse in the Dnieper. Thus the whole nation became nominally Christian. This kind of conversion is still practised among the nations which come under the rule of Russia.

Through Peter the Great the Church was closely united with the State, and the Holy Synod instituted, which ever since has formed an important part of the Government. It consists of the highest dignitaries of the Greek Church. These priests are celibate; the inferior priests are allowed to marry—once.

THE OFFICE AND THE MAN.

The religious Russian, as a rule, has more reverence for the vesture of the priest than for his person. As an illustration, it is said of a community that, shocked with their priest's drunken life, they decided to show him their disapprobation in an effectual manner; but before administering the deserved flogging they carefully removed his sacramental garments and laid them reverently aside. They reverenced the priest, but punished the man.

The churches are built mostly in the Byzantine style, and contain neither seats nor statues, but plenty of pictures. In every Russian hotel, at every station, on every steamer, in private houses, and even in prison cells, one sees the icon with burning lamp before it. It seemed as if the worship of the people largely consisted in crossing themselves. The driver will cross himself as he passes a church, and the beggar on receiving an alms from the hand of a passer-by.

The teaching is sound on the doctrine of the Atonement, but so much of tradition about saints and miracles has been added to it, that the Orthodox Russian has to look upon his Saviour through a thick layer of legend and human invention. No wonder that he is not able to see Him clearly. He may read the Bible, but must not comment upon it. "The Greek Church" has been said to consist of one-third Old Testament, one-third Gospel, and one-third heathenism. Perhaps this is true of other forms of Christianity. There is not the same worship given to Mary as in the Roman Catholic Church. He who worships Mary or any saint is anathema, but he who does not reverence Mary and the saints is anathema also. The golden mean between reverence and worship is difficult to find, especially as the Church teaches that Mary and the saints are interceding for the faithful.

Yet there are more sects in Russia than one would think possible with the close vigilance that is being exercised over the people. The denominations legally recognised are—the Lutheran, the Baptist, the Roman Catholic, and the Mennonite. All other sects are outside legal protection, and are only tolerated by the goodwill of local authorities. Stundists, properly speaking, do not exist as a denomination. The name has become one of opprobrium and of danger, since everybody who claims the right of expounding the Word of God, or of praying apart from the prescribed method, is stamped by the Greek Church as a renegade. The name is derived from the German "Stunde"—hour. The habit of coming together to an "Andachtstunde"—hour of prayer—was introduced into Russia by German settlers; but, curiously enough, it only applies now to Russians who have left the Orthodox Greek Church, and claim the right of searching the Scriptures and of praying without the Prayer Book.

A NOTABLE REFORMER.

Menno Simons was one of the men of the Reformation who fearlessly held up the light of the Gospel. A Dutchman, born at Witmarsum, in Friesland, in 1492, he studied at a German university (supposed to have been Heidelberg) for the priesthood. In 1524 he became vicar of Pinningen. There, while studying the New Testament, hitherto a strange book to him, he became convinced of the necessity of conversion through repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. With this he began to teach the necessity of baptism and the iniquity of war, protesting against Christians bearing arms and fighting.

The manifesto of the German Emperor Charles V. against the new teaching, as it was termed by the Catholics, and which was issued in 1537, brought all propagators of heresy into great danger. Whosoever received them, or held conversation with them, or read their books, or did any service to them, was liable to loss of property and even death. A price of 100 florins was offered as a reward to him who would bring Menno Simons to Leeuwarden. A godly man, Tjaart Raynerson, who had hidden him in his house, and who knew of his whereabouts, refusing to betray him, however, suffered the tortures of the Inquisition for his sake, and afterwards death. Another, Jan Klaesen, was executed for publishing and printing Menno's works.

With his delicate wife and little children, Menno escaped in 1543 to Emden, in East Friesland, where the Countess Anna von Oldenburg ruled. Though kindly received, he was not able to remain long. His enemies tried to get hold of him at a meeting. Failing this, they engaged a brother, whose love of money was greater than his faith, to get Menno into their power. He promised to do so, and shortly after, accompanied by an official, he perceived the refugee as he steered by in a little boat to reach the opposite shore of a canal. Not until he was safely out of reach did the would-be traitor exclaim: "There! Our bird has escaped." On being reproached that it was by his fault, the man said: "I could not speak; my tongue was tied." This candid confession cost him his life. He was beheaded.

From Emden Menno Simons went to Cologne to seek protection from the Prince Elector, Archbishop Hermann von Wied, who was a stout friend of the Evangelical cause, and befriended the homeless one as long as he had power to do so. On his removal on account of his enemies, Menno had to flee again.

During his missionary wanderings through the Baltic provinces, many congregations were formed, calling themselves "Taufgesinnte," or Baptists, while their opponents called them Mennonites. In 1553 the reformer was active in Wisma, but two years afterwards he was again obliged to take to wandering, until he found a resting place with the Count of Fresenburg, near Oldeslohe, in Holstein, who, after several visits to the Netherlands, was filled with admiration for the steadfastness and piety of these persecuted Protestants, proposing that they should settle down on his estates. Many accepted this offer. Prosperous congregations were formed and colonies founded. There Menno was allowed to continue his work undisturbed, and to establish a printing-press for the spread of his books, the most important of which is—"Die Fundamente der Seligmachenden Lehre Jesu Christi." The Fundamentals of the Saving Teaching of Jesus—with the motto 1 Cor. iii. 11.

He died on January 13, 1561, and was buried in his own garden at Wüstenfelde. The spot of his last resting-place is unknown. The Thirty Years' War so destroyed the country, that even the position of the village cannot be given with certainty. R. C. M.

The Basutoland Mission.

WE have from time to time called attention to the Basutoland Mission, a French agency in British territory in South Africa. During a period of well nigh seventy years, devoted pastors and evangelists have been sowing the Gospel seed and reaping heavenly harvests. The Mission has developed marvellously, and tribes which but a few years ago were sunk in barbarism are now sending the Glad Tidings to their brethren in "the regions beyond." The story of the labours of the Casalis, the Mabilles, the Dykes will long live in the memories and affections of Christian communities in South Africa.

Since Basutoland came under British protection, it has been felt very keenly by many friends of missions that the exertions of our French brethren should be recognised in a more substantial manner than hitherto. Some few Christians in Great Britain have been unswerving in their hearty support; but in a general way but little has been done to relieve the burden of the French Missionary Society by sharing the expenses of the work. It is hoped that, with renewed interest in all things that are South African, there will arise a sincere attempt to put the Basuto work—which is second to none in the romance of missions—on a more fitting and substantial basis.

Meantime, Mrs. Sutherland Taylor, who has long been exercised in endeavours to advance the claims of the Mission, is disseminating information in a variety of ways. "The History of the Basutoland Mission," from 1833 to 1902, translated from the French (one penny), is worth careful study. We should be glad to know that many of our readers applied for copies of the report for 1900, of the latest Occasional Paper; and of a Calendar, in cards, artistically illustrated and admirably printed (6d.) Another attractive publication is a series of pictorial postcards (a halfpenny each). Mrs. Taylor (25, Brownswood Road, Clissold Park, N.) is arranging meetings for the beginning of the year, to be addressed by Pastor Casalis, who comes to England in February.

For Italian Peasants.

A SCHEME has been propounded by Dr. Barthe, of Piacenza, for the spiritual and social amelioration of Italian peasants by means of farms where technical instruction in agriculture shall be given to the men employed, but where the chief aim shall be evangelistic. Dr. Barthe, who is technical secretary of a society for the improvement and development of agriculture, travels much in Italy, and in the course of his journeyings has become deeply impressed with the necessity for an organized effort to reach the country people with the Gospel. There are missions in the towns, but the agrarian population is under the thumb of the priesthood.

It is suggested by Dr. Barthe that a model farm should be established in each Italian province, to be conducted by Christian men on scientific principles and a self-supporting basis, affording employment to those who desire to escape from their present circumstances, and constituting a centre of Evangelical effort. The financial management would be placed in the hands of trustees and a responsible committee. Professor J. Giglioli, of the Agricultural Experiment station in Rome, has expressed his willingness to assist in the technical direction.

In order to bring the plan before Christians in Great Britain, Dr. Barthe is prepared to obtain leave of absence from his society (the Co-operative League of Agrarian Unions) and address any meetings which friends may arrange with a view to the formation of a committee. Dr. Barthe may be addressed:—Care of Mr. W. Walters, Scripture Gift Mission, 15, Strand, W.C.

CHINESE CONVERTS.

WRITING cheering references to recent baptisms, Mr. John A. Stooke (China Inland Mission Sanitarium, Chefoo) mentions the following: — "Our native serving woman (the wife of our Christian cook) desired to follow the Lord by confession of faith in Him. It was all so joyfully spontaneous—we could but thank our God for her coming out, so simply and yet so boldly. Later on, she came to Mrs. Stooke and said, 'I think it will please Jesus to see my feet unbound, for it won't be right as his follower if I continue the old practice.' A day or two after she appeared with large shoes which she had been making for herself, her husband having said she was quite at liberty to carry out her convictions."

FRENCH MOUNTAIN CHILDREN.

In the parish of Plan de Baix, situated in the mountains of the Drôme, lies the hamlet of Lozeron, to which Pastor Niel is only able to go one Sunday a month. He has been unable, therefore, to hold Sunday-school often enough to make the teaching effectual; and the mountain passes are too difficult for the children to come from Lozeron to Plan de Baix. Wishing to change this state of things, the pastor is trying to establish a regular school, to be held on Sundays and Thursdays, and has found some persons who are willing to help. They would teach the children to sing the hymns, and on Sunday evenings would give lessons to the parents also.

PERSIAN ORPHANS.

In a recent letter from Urumiah, Deacon Abraham gives an interesting account of the work at his orphanage. "The only books we use for singing are Sacred Songs and psalms. We read daily from the Old and New Testaments, from which I teach Gospel truths. On Sunday afternoon we go to the old church, where psalms are sung and the Scriptures read. The preachers are the pastor and myself. The church has a Sunday-school in the morning, quite Evangelical; but morning and evening every day the services are going on. As our books are in the ancient language, we are trying to translate them into modern Syriac." The correspondent in England is Miss Barclay, Urie, Tranton Road, Bermondsey, S.E.

GOOD TIDINGS FROM CHILI.

"Here, in Chili," writes Rev. P. Rose (San Bernardo), "the Gospel is gaining ground. Slowly but surely the people are awaking to the fact that all the old superstitions and legends of Rome are powerless to save and keep, and so far as the male portion of the population is concerned, many openly avow their disbelief in, and contempt for the priests. But for lack of the saving knowledge of the truth, many of these, alas, lapse into utter infidelity. In the Northern and Southern provinces opposition is not so strong, and the people are more liberal; but the Central provinces are yet a stronghold of Popery, and there is a constant, persistent antagonism to the spread of the Gospel.

"Quite lately a door has been, we might almost say 'miraculously,' opened into the city of Rancagua, which has hitherto been practically closed to the Gospel. One man who professed to be a Protestant entered heartily into our plans. He is a butcher, and after his conversion used his opportunities to speak with his customers. Very soon the priest cursed him, and warned the people from the pulpit that those who entered his shop to buy, or who even spoke to him, would commit a mortal sin, and share in his eternal condemnation. These threats took such effect that his business was ruined, and he was compelled to close his shop and remove to Rancagua.

"There, too, he has given a bold testimony for Christ, standing alone; and now, that there is a hope of the work being opened, he is most enthusiastic. With much difficulty a room has been secured, and he has insisted on paying the rent for two months, as his share towards beginning the work." Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, Fisherton Rectory, Salisbury, Wilts, acts as home correspondent for this effort.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR IN AUSTRIA.

A remarkable account has just reached us of the doings of the Christian Endeavour Society at Graz, in Austria. The only Christian convalescent home not only in the city, but in the whole of Styria, where invalids, forsaken women, old and indigent servants, and sick people could find a peaceful abode, with liberty to hold their own beliefs, had existed for six years, but was about to be abandoned in 1898, after the death of Mr. Phil W. Reinmuth, the founder. The Society stepped into the breach, resolved to take up the burden, and has since carried it on.

"It has been often the only refuge and the last shelter. The Lord, by means of dear friends, has always given as much as was wanted; but now the chief creditor reclaims the purchase money in half-year instalments of 1,000fl. (£83 7s.) each. To pay this is impossible unless friends from far and near succour with great and small offerings. The whole of our debt is 19,000fl. (nearly £1,600. We cannot believe that (when the magistrates have turned friendly to us and have granted permanent immunity from the very heavy taxes) this work should perish."

INCREASING CONFIDENCE IN MOROCCO.

After fifteen years of service in Morocco, Dr. Robert Kerr (Rabat) is able to say that "One of the cheering features of the work is the increasing confidence of the people in us. Fifteen years ago I could scarcely get any who would have their children vaccinated. Both Jews and Moors believed that I should insert something into the blood which would inevitably lead them to become Christians. During the past six months I have successfully vaccinated over 200 children. While the medical work has been encouraging, the evangelistic work has been more so. Hundreds have had the Gospel explained to them personally. At the dispensary we have had teacher and student, prince and peasant, who have each received a Bible.

"Although we cannot speak of open conversions, yet we believe that God's Word will not return to Him void. We have had more indoor patients in the hospital this year than in previous years. None of them, I regret to say, could read; but we endeavoured to make it plain to all that they needed a Saviour, and that Jesus alone could save them."

Mr. Grahame Wilson, 191, Meadowpark Street, Dennistoun, Glasgow, will correspond.

HOPEFUL SIGNS IN CHINA.

The great progress which has been made during recent months towards the settlement of China receives new confirmation in a recent letter from Rev. Dr. Griffith John, which we have pleasure in quoting: "I hope to visit Hunan soon; the news from Mr. Peng is very good. He is in the midst of a wonderful work and the officials are perfectly friendly. The news coming at this time from Hengchou is of great value. It shows that the Empress-Dowager means to protect the missionaries and the Christians, and that means a great deal to us in Hunan. You hear a good deal about dangers ahead, and the papers are full of alarming surmises. I see no sign of anything of the kind in this region. My own impression is that we are now in for a long period of peace. The Chinese are prostrate, and can do nothing. We have now a splendid opportunity for aggressive work in every part of the Empire, but especially in Central China. Our opportunities in China have never been so encouraging as they are now. Our educational scheme (in Hankow) has been a great success; as an educational establishment it is self-supporting and more, but we are at a standstill for want of money to put up new and suitable buildings. I feel that a start must be made, so I have just concluded a contract with a builder for a Theological Hall, which will have to be paid for out of my own pocket. It will consist of three class-rooms, a large lecture-room, a library, a guest-room, and two or three small rooms besides.

Romish Tyranny in Spain.

A MEMBER of the Reformed Congregation in Salamanca, who surrendered a lucrative post to become a colporteur of the Bible Society, has been the victim of the bigotry and anti-Christian feeling of the priest of the village of Topas. The colporteur arrived at the village about noon, and in an hour's time he found in his lodging the parish priest, the local mayor, and a number of officials, who commanded him to leave the village at once, to sell his books to them, and not to come back.

The colporteur, knowing that his Bibles, if sold, would be burned, refused to sell, and the enraged Ultramontanes seized the parcel, and, taking the Bibles from their case, threw them into the street. When this was done, they attacked him with clenched fists, the priest leading them, and personally beat him on the face. Satisfied with their violence, they brought him to gaol, where he was visited by some Christian friends. From the window he was able to hold conversation with them, and to receive food and clothing. On the morrow the Mayor, realizing that he had committed a crime, went to Salamanca to interview the civil governor, who ordered the immediate release of the prisoner, and imposed a fine on the local authorities.

This is but one of many incidents occurring in Spain which point to the desperate hatred of the Roman clergy to the translated Word of God, and the desire on the part of the more responsible officials to protect the reformers against the violence of bigots. Slowly but surely the reformers make progress, and the brave victim of the above outrage has been privileged to sow the seed from which three congregations of Spanish Protestants have sprung. The Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society, Church House, Westminster, will gladly give particulars of the work which they help.

Pastor Joye in London.

AN interesting meeting, presided over by Lord Radstock, was held on behalf of "La Société Evangélique de France" at 5, Cambridge Gate, Regent's Park, at the invitation of Miss Dashwood, on Thursday, December 12. Pastor Joye, delegate of the Society, gave an earnest and impressive address, in French, on the work of the Society, which, he pointed out, was founded entirely for the spread of God's Word, and the results are quite marvellous, even where there has been no teacher accompanying it. In France there are, at the present time, 30,000,000 people who have left or are protesting against Roman Catholicism, and 25,000,000 who are totally indifferent to Christianity. With numbers of these there is an unsatisfied longing for something higher and better; in fact, God and his Word is what they want and need so much.

It was shown that among those who have believed on the Lord Jesus Christ there are some whose lives are full of faith and zeal even amid isolation and persecution. The speaker also gave a graphic description of his visit to a mountain Sunday School, where all present, men and women, young people and children, had repeated to him verses of Scripture. On expressing joy and surprise at this unlooked-for experience, an old man of seventy-two years said, "Monsieur, before God there is no age, we are all children." Amongst those present to hear the address were the hon. Mrs. A. Fraser, Mrs. Robert Barclay, Mrs. E. B. Russell, Miss Mac Innes, and Mrs. Savile. This movement is in need of support. Miss E. Dashwood will gladly forward any gifts to the secretary, Pastor Emile Bertrand; office, 32, Rue Vaugirard, Paris.

Poona.—An esteemed correspondent, writing with regard to the account which appeared in The Christian of December 5 of Mr. and Mrs. Dannefoerd's Soldiers' Mission at Poona, enumerates a number of other religious agencies among the military. The Church of England has a chaplain and a Scripture-reader, while the Wesleyans also have a chaplain. Many of the soldiers, too, attend the Presbyterian U.F. Church, or the American Methodist. Our correspondent also points out the need of evangelistic operations among soldiers in India in those places where the ritualistic chaplain is the only religious teacher.

*Put to the Test.

By WILLIAM J. FOSTER.

GEORGE FENTON was the only son of a widow in humble circumstances, and it had been a hard struggle to maintain herself and child in respectability. At a short distance from the Fentons there was a very comfortable house, standing in its own grounds, known as "Eston Lodge." Mr. Jones, its owner, was an eccentric individual, who was greatly troubled with an affection of the eyes, and this prevented his doing much reading. After a time the idea occurred to him that he might perhaps find a youth who could read aloud to him for an hour or so each evening. Accordingly, one morning he looked in at the National School, and asked the head teacher if he could recommend a boy for this purpose. The master at once bethought him of George Fenton, and pointed him out to Mr. Jones. That gentleman closely scrutinised the youth for some little time, and then said, "May I just hear him read?"

"Certainly," replied the master, anxious to give George any help he could.

The visitor's manner was so brusque that George naturally felt rather nervous; but though he had no idea what it was all for, he managed to acquit himself to the old gentleman's entire satisfaction. Having replied to a few questions, he was engaged by Mr. Jones to go for an hour and a half to Eston Lodge each evening for the purpose of reading aloud to him. The youth went home that morning in high glee to tell his mother the good news.

This occupation bid fair to be as pleasant as profitable, and George went home thoroughly satisfied with his first experience as a "professional reader!"

"He's certainly a queer gentleman," remarked the youth when taking his supper that night. "He scarcely speaks, but points with his finger to the place where I am to begin. Sometimes he calls out, 'Stop,' and remains silent for a minute or two, and then says, 'Go on.' But I rather like Mr. Jones, and shall certainly do my best to please him."

Mr. Jones had become aware that George was desircus of obtaining a situation, and of leaving school entirely. It happened that a junior clerk was then needed at a business house in which Mr. Jones had still a considerable moneyed interest, although he had long retired from personal oversight of it. He had taken a liking to George, and, knowing that the youth was a member of a band of hope, resolved to put his temperance principles to the test. "For if he is staunch to them," said he, "it will show that the youngster can he relied upon in other respects."

Accordingly, one evening, just as the boy entered the library, Mr. Jones said, "Oh, George, I want you first of all to run down to the wine and spirit merchant's at the corner of the road and bring me a bottle of their best brandy. Take this half-sovereign and bring me the change."

Poor George was greatly startled by this unexpected request. His cheek flushed, and there was a tremor in his voice, as he exclaimed: "Please, sir, don't ask me to do that, for I belong to the Band of Hope."

"Well, and pray what's that got to do with it?" asked Mr. Jones testily. "I am not asking you to drink any of it; nor to go to the public-house. The shop is a most respectable one, and you can be back here again in less than five minutes."

"I could not fetch it, sir," he quietly but firmly replied, "because I have promised neither to taste nor to handle it, and I should be breaking my pledge."

"Very good," said Mr. Jones, now determined to ascertain whether the boy would really persist in his refusal. "If you are not disposed to oblige me in so small a matter, I shall have to find a youth who will. Here are your wages for this week. We had better consider our engagement at an end."

This was a disheartening blow to George, but his conscience told him he was acting rightly, and he prepared to leave. Just as he reached the door, Mr. Jones again held out the half-sovereign, saying: "Hadn't you better change your mind?"

"No, sir," firmly replied the youth; "I cannot break my pledge."

Mr. Jones made no further remark, and George sadly went home. One thing comforted him, however, and that was that he felt quite sure of his mother's approval. Directly she heard what had transpired, Mrs. Fenton declared that she was proud of having a son who could act so brave and true a part, and George went to bed that night far happier than he had expected.

To his astonishment, whilst the mother and son were at breakfast next morning, the postman handed in a letter addressed to Master George Fenton. It was from Mr. Jones. Soon after the youth had quitted Eston Lodge on the previous evening, Mr. Jones sat down and wrote a few lines asking the boy to call and see him at the usual hour. There was a postcript to this effect: "I wanted to put you to the test, and I am satisfied with the result."

This was re-assuring, and in the evening George again took up his reading aloud as if nothing had occurred. Not long afterwards, on the recommendation of Mr. Jones, a place as junior clerk was offered to him, and thankfully accepted.

* Abbreviated from A Terrible Fix (1s. Robert Culley), an excellent collection of stories for young people. It is hoped that boys and girls who may be disposed to think George was unfairly treated will learn from this story something of the real nature of temptation. The testing comes differently in every life, but whether in outward form like George's experience, or in the secret of the heart, we must be prepared in the strength of God to meet it in even severer degree than this.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

NEXT TERM.—Rules for Bible Searchers.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. Answers for the "second list" which reach the office after midday Wednesday are too late. Those from Scotland and Ireland only will be received till Thursday morning.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

All communications must be addressed to "Uncle Tom," the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

☞ PRIZE COMPETITIONS—NEW RULES. ☜

Please note that in future there will be Three Prize Competitions instead of four in the year, namely, at the end of April, August and December.

There will thus be sixteen weekly Searchers before next Competition, for which those will be eligible whose names appear as correct in the weekly list twelve times between Jan. 2 and April 24.

Those whose 10th or 18th birthdays occur during this period may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age. There is no limit of age for weekly searchers; but no one above eighteen years of age can enter for the Competitions.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 309).

1. How did Christ come to earth? (Luke.)
2. When did little children suffer for Christ? (Matt.)
3. What happened to Christ Himself when a Child? (Luke.)
4. When did children serve Christ? (Matt. xx-xxv.)
5. How did Christ show his love for little children? (Mark.)
6. On what occasion was a small boy of use to Christ? (John.)
7. On what occasion was Christ of use to a young girl? (Matt.)
8. When did Christ make use of a child to impress an important lesson? (Matt. xv.-xx.)
9. What child began very early to serve the Lord? (Old Testament.)
10. What child became a king while still very young? (2 Kings x.-xv.)
11. What is said of children in Psa. viii.?
12. How soon may we begin to love and serve Christ? (Pro. viii.)

(Children under ten, do any 4; under thirteen, any 7; under seventeen, any 10.)

PRIZE COMPETITION.

I shall be glad if as many as possible will send me in their answers to No. 309 by next post, so that I may make the "Eligible List" for the Prize Competition as complete as possible.

Remember to give your full address, as well as your name and age.

NEXT PRIZE COMPETITION.

The Prize Questions next week will be from:—

Our Gifts to Our King (Matt. ii. 1-12).

TO the new-born King the East brought its treasures. Gold, frankincense, and myrrh are royal gifts, and it was meet that they should come from the East, as though the morning of the world were bent on giving its best. Oh! that the time may come when all the morning lands of the world may send to Christ their tribute, according to those ancient predictions of Isaiah (chapter lx. and lxvi.). You, dear young brothers and sisters, are the children of the morning land, not geographically, but by reason of your young life. The star of dawn is shining in your sky; within your reach are the royal gifts, the gold of affection, the frankincense of prayer, and the myrrh of love. Bring these and lay them before Him. Best of all, yield Him your hearts like alabaster boxes of very precious ointment.

The astronomer, Kepler, has supposed that the journey of the Wise Men originated in a remarkable conjunction of planets. Whether this were so or that a single star, which reminded them of Balaam's prophecy, led them to undertake their quest is of little importance compared with the great lesson which their action teaches, that we should be ever on the look-out for the direction of God's spirit and prepare to follow it wherever it may lead. God comes to each of us in our special sphere. To the shepherds He sends angel voices; to Zacharias, Gabriel; and to the Wise Men a star. Those whose hearts are opened by the Spirit will find that voices speak and hands point from the midst of their daily environment towards Jesus the King.

So full were they of the object of their search that they thought that Jerusalem, the Holy City, from the king to the humblest child would participate in their enthusiasm. They were greatly astonished to find that it was not so. There was orthodoxy, a correct interpretation of Scripture, a precision of knowledge and information which the far East could not boast, but there was no enthusiasm or desire. Indeed, the thought of a King inspired trouble and terror lest again there might be civil war, intrigue, and anarchy. It is true that Herod professed his desire to come and worship, but malice was in his heart, and he only waited to obtain the information he sought to secure the child's death. Do not let your enthusiasm be damped by the want of response in others. Turn from the crowd to the King.

How often we begin by following the star of God's guidance, and after a while find ourselves in Jerusalem amid the babble of human counsellors and advisers! We become bewildered and despondent; it seems as though no one thoroughly understands our case. But presently we leave the city behind, and find ourselves again beneath the vault of heaven; the star comes once more in view, and guides us as we follow, till we reach our goal.

The seeking soul is always tested when first it comes into the presence of Jesus. His humble parentage, the lowliness of his circumstances, the simplicity of his aspect seem incongruous to the greatness of his claims until we learn that God hides Himself in the common and lowly, that He may test the ardour of our desire.

Sense and sight are tempted to exclaim, "Is not this the carpenter?" but those who will press through the veil into the presence of the King will find Him royal; indeed, upon his brow are many crowns, and to his hand all power in heaven and upon earth are entrusted. You may be disappointed in the simplicity of the Gospel, and that you are not bidden to do a great thing. You may miss the warm rush of emotion, and the halo of mystery and miracle till you come to learn that the Divine fire trembles in an acacia bush, and the Son of God is wrapt in swaddling clothes. Judge not by appearance.

Have you given yourself to Christ? This is your first and greatest gift, and it involves all beside. Turn from this page, fall down and worship, open your treasures. The presents the Magi brought were needed to pay the expenses of the holy family in Egypt, to which they had suddenly to flee, and what you give to Christ, with your heart's adoration, will be set apart by Him for necessary uses to expedite his holy Gospel among mankind. Review (Psa. cv.)

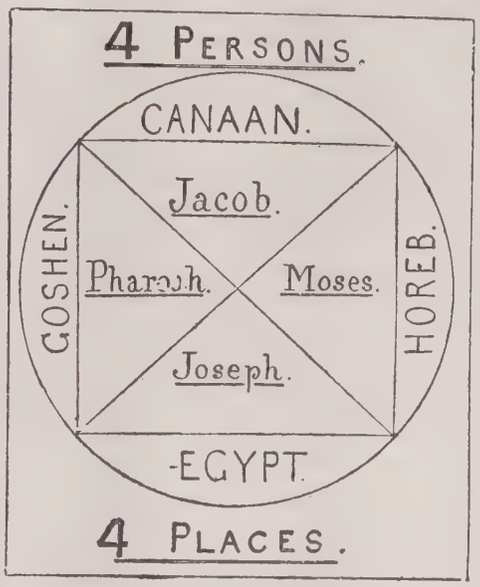
Golden Text (Rom. viii. 31).

THIS quarter our lessons have been chiefly about four people and four countries, with nine practical points for our particular instruction.



Four People.

I. Jacob. The old, indulgent father, who had been the wily one, the supplanter of his brother, the deceiver of his father, but changed to him who had "power to prevail in prayer." His great trouble in the loss of his son turned out a blessing, and he ends his days in peace and comfort in Goshen, and is buried with Egyptian pomp in the Cave of Machpelah.

II. Joseph, the conscientious, aspiring, trustworthy boy, becomes the God-fearing man. Prepared by trouble for future greatness. The secret of his success, "the Lord was with him."

We find him the beloved son, despised and rejected, brought down to the pit, falsely accused, but afterwards exalted. God's servant, trusted in whatever position he occupies. Notice the fulness of forgiving love, and the more than fulfilment of all his promises.

III. Pharaoh. The name for the Kings of Egypt. Thothmes III., the Pharaoh of Joseph's elevation; the huge head of his statue is in the British Museum. Rameses II., the Pharaoh of the oppression; his statue has been removed to Turin. Meneptah II., son of Rameses, the Pharaoh of the Exodus, whose chariots and horsemen all perished in the Red Sea.

IV. Moses. The beautiful baby saved from the water. His training, his character; his difficult work. His mistakes and his wise choice. The honour God put upon him, speaking to him face to face (Deut. xxxiv. 10). His meekness (Num. xii. 3). And yet he never got into Canaan. Why?

Four Countries.

I. Canaan.—The land promised to Abraham for his descendants. Situated at the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea. Very fertile. The land of the Bible. Chief town, Jerusalem.

II. Egypt.—North-east of Africa, the land of the Nile. The Hebrews call it Mizraim. A flourishing country even in the time of Abraham. Inhabited by the descendants of Ham.

III. Goshen.—The home of the Israelites in Egypt. A rich province between the Delta of the Nile and the Red Sea, given by Pharaoh to Joseph.

IV. Horeb.—Moses led his flocks to the fertile plains below this mountain, and there God called him to the great work of delivering his people, and said they should worship him in this place after leaving Egypt.

Practical Points.

1. God can overrule our afflictions, and turn them into blessings.
2. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."
3. Lesson in forgiveness.
4. How was Joseph a type of Christ?
5. God always raises up those whom He will to fulfil his promises.
6. The great deliverances wrought by God.
7. How awful a thing it is to defy Jehovah, or harden our hearts against Him.
8. Christ our Passover, sacrificed for us.
9. If God be for us who can be against us?

(The review should be conducted mainly by means of questions, bringing out the principal events, and eliciting where the practical points come in.)

Million New Pledges Crusade.

Rev. Dr. HENRY'S CAMPAIGN.

THE Sunderland meetings of Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and the Fisk Jubilee Singers were among the most impressive that have been held during the campaign.

The gatherings commenced on December 10 in the Victoria Hall, and attracted vast audiences. In the afternoon Mr. T. R. Blumer presided, and in the evening Alderman Bruce. The second meeting was particularly inspiring. Dr. Henry, in the course of his powerful address, touched upon the "club" evil, and said that in several important political clubs in the United States the sale of strong drink is forbidden. The speaker also showed the beneficial results accruing from local veto in the State of New York, where the number of public-houses has greatly decreased. Dr. Henry added encouraging words to temperance workers, and in his lucid and forcible arguments against the traffic aroused the enthusiasm of his hearers. The gatherings were continued on the following day. The night meeting, presided over by Councillor Nicholson, proved a glorious success. Our correspondent writes of it:—"Dr. Henry was superb, and the impression made was very great. In the two days in Sunderland 388 pledges were taken, and all the meetings, in spite of the weather, were magnificent."

At Darlington the weather conditions were such as to militate against the success of the meetings, but the attendances were remarkably large at the two demonstrations in the Assembly Hall, which were held on December 12. At the evening meeting, in particular, a deep impression was made. Dr. Henry spoke powerfully upon the ravages of the drink traffic, and the necessity for united effort to combat its influence. Councillor Harbottle presided, and in response to his appreciative words the entire audience rose, as an expression of their desire for a week's mission by Dr. Henry and the Jubilee Singers, at an early date.

Sheffield was the scene of one of the heaviest storms of recent years on Friday and Saturday last, but, in spite of the hurricane, there were good audiences, on each occasion, in the Albert Hall, and Dr. Henry and the Singers were warmly received. Sir Charles Skelton, J.P., presided at the opening meeting, and on Friday afternoon Mr. H. W. Gallimore. Dr. Henry gave telling addresses. Both afternoon and night the programme was of a varied and attractive character, lectures, illustrated with biograph pictures, helping to set forth lessons of total abstinence.

Returning to the London district, Dr. Henry and the Singers held a large and enthusiastic meeting in the Congregational Church, Woodford Green, on Monday evening last. Mr. W. H. Brown presided, and Revs. W. Anderton and Thos. Hammond took part. Dr. Henry's address set forth "the peril of the Christian Church, and the peril of the nation," caused by the strong drink traffic. Dr. Henry urgently appealed to his hearers to take a definite stand on the side of total abstinence, and there were many responses.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

The Twentieth Century Christian Temperance Campaign. Rev. Dr. Henry and the Fisk Jubilee Singers will resume their campaign towards the end of January. Jan. 23, Nottingham; Feb. 1-9, Dublin.

The Evangelistic Mission.

STRONGLY conservative in respect to the grand old foundation truths of the Holy Scriptures, yet liberal in its methods of bringing those truths to bear upon the minds of the masses, the Evangelistic Mission steadily pursues its course in many ways and many places; its clear, plain testimony, which has been given for thirty-six years, still proving the power of God unto salvation to many souls both of young and old in this and other lands.

BLESSED MEMORIES.

In addition to several large halls erected by the Mission, many others have been hired from time to time, as well as theatres, music halls, and tents. The founder of the Mission was recently preaching in the Metropolitan Theatre on a Sunday evening, when he was reminded that it was thirty-five years that very day when he conducted the first service in the large music hall which a few years ago gave place to the more elaborate structure in which some 3,000 people were then assembled. He recalled that on that first night the first soul converted to God, amongst several others, was a young man of striking physique named Arthur H. Wheeler, who from that hour became a devoted disciple and worker for God amongst other young men—for many years in various Y.M.C.A.'s, and then chiefly as founder of the Soldiers' Christian Association, which soon numbered over 400 branches, in connection with which he led the band of noble workers amongst the troops on active service in South Africa, where he contracted enteric fever, and returned home to enter into rest with Christ. Mr. Wheeler was the means, in God's hands, of blessing to many souls—a military officer has said, to thousands; on the 35th anniversary of that first service, other young men and women confessed to trust the Lord who saved and kept and used his servant Wheeler.

In the same place on Sunday last, as Mr. Hurditch was again telling out the "old, old story," the friend who was the soloist on the occasion related how God had led him to Christ under his preaching in the Conference Hall, Belgravia, nineteen years ago. He rejoiced now to bear testimony to the power of Christ to save and to keep the soul that trusts Him, which blessed fact has been confirmed in the cases of thousands who have been converted through the various means employed in connection with this good work, which space forbids particularizing.

CONVERTS' WITNESSING.

Many of these converts, trained as workers in this Mission, are now earnestly witnessing for Christ in many parts of the world—some in the most distant Protectorates of the British Empire, including Mr. Hurditch's two daughters, now bearing the burden and heat of the day in N.W. India (Z.B. and M.M.) and Toro (C.M.S.), in the very heart of "Darkest Africa," close to Stanley's Pigmy Forest, the first convert from which ancient race, the Pigmies, has just been baptized in Toro, where a truly marvellous work is being witnessed, over 700 professed converts having been baptized after patient, careful examination within the past year.

The Home work amongst the young is very cheering. Thousands of children attend its Sunday schools, many of whom have given evidence of the new birth and promise of great usefulness in years to come, availing themselves of the Bible classes, "Christian Endeavour," and other agencies for training to this end. The mothers' meetings, too, have proved the means of blessing to not a few, while open-air preaching in innumerable places has been used of God in leading many to the Saviour, particularly at the seaside services, both for children and adults, attended by several thousands. The distribution of Gospel literature in like manner has proved a means of great blessing, and the good news has carried light and life to many souls. Tent meetings in country towns and villages during the past year have been well attended, and by this means the evangelistic mission preachers have carried the Gospel into dark districts where it is seldom or never heard, but where ritualistic sacerdotalism abounds.

ITS HELPERS.

These comprise, in addition to the paid staff of evangelists, a considerable number of voluntary workers in all stations of life, including peers of the realm and other persons of title, lawyers, doctors, merchants, tradesmen, mechanics, servants and others, who have conducted its services, preaching the same glorious Gospel they have alike proved the power of in their own hearts and lives; while clergymen and ministers of nearly every denomination have been ready to assist in its conferences and other important gatherings, knowing well the absolutely undenominational and unsectarian character of the Mission, which in its turn is ever ready to assist evangelistic work in their respective churches; this has indeed been done in many towns and villages near and far.

RELIEF OF THE POOR.

It is not always that those who receive benefits are as really grateful for them as they should be, but many touching instances could be recorded of gratitude on the part of the poor to whom help has been repeatedly given from the Mission relief funds. Among these may be given the following:—

G. H. was for many years assisted by its funds, but becoming permanently enfeebled and needing constant care and nursing, it was necessary he should enter Paddington Infirmary. Here he was well cared for in every way. One morning he received a letter from a nobleman enclosing a five-pound note for himself. This he returned in a polite and grateful note to the donor, saying that as all his necessaries were provided for, he had no need of the generous gift, but that if his lordship would send it to the Director of "The Evangelistic Mission," he would be glad, as he knew how helpful it would prove to many other needy ones. The nobleman accordingly sent it on to the Mission as a gift from the poor man referred to.

A very similar instance happened only a few weeks ago, and many a poorly-written letter reaches the office enclosing a small donation wrapt up in love and gratitude to God for blessings received through the Mission.

HOMES OF REST.

Among the many other agencies that may be recorded, not the least is the large House of Rest at St. Leonards, for ministers and Christian workers of all denominations. This Home has been full almost since the date of opening. It is delightful to witness how Christians, differing widely on points of truth, dwell together in perfect love and unity, so that while there have been Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Baptists, Methodists, Quakers, and others disowning any denominational title, staying there at one time, it would be difficult in many cases to distinguish the one from the other, blessedly recognising each other as members of the One Body, rejoicing together in their common portion in Christ, seeking to help one another forward in the spiritual life, as well as endeavouring to recoup their wasted physical energies by legitimate recreation. Letters, subsequently to hand, speak with sincere gratitude of the rest and change thus enjoyed.

It is, indeed, earnestly to be desired that while new movements aiming to reach particular sections of the community are being developed from time to time, such time-honoured and God-owned agencies as this, carrying the Gospel to "all sorts and conditions of men," may be thoroughly well-sustained, and that those responsible for its care and furtherance may be kept free from financial stress and strain. Communications should be addressed to the director, C. Russell Hurditch, 154, Alexandra Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Protestantism in Ireland.—In three-fourths of Ireland a Protestant need not apply for any position of trust or emolument under the Urban, District or County Councils. Then the landlords are being driven away, and now the United Irish League has issued its injunction that Protestants must join the League under pain of being boycotted. No option is afforded in the case. They must really either join the League or leave their farms. Thus the squeezing process is going on, and it is feared that in a very few years outside the towns and cities hardly a single Protestant will be left in many parts of the south and west.

The Boy Preacher

AT SHOREDITCH TABERNACLE

By Rev. W. CUFF.

THE mission at Shoreditch is now in its third week. There is no falling off in the crowds that fill the Tabernacle, or in the deep feeling and interest produced. The addresses are fresh, and yet there is a marked sameness in them all. I have heard nearly all of them for a fortnight, and there are two every night—one to the general audience and another in the after meeting; the latter is to Christians and seekers after God.

The boy's talks to Christians are searching, and sometimes severe. One well-taught and devoted man said to me the other night, "I do not agree with all he says; but he talks to us more like a man of fifty years' experience than a boy of sixteen." In some parts of his speeches that is true; and then anon we get the real boy.

C. H. SPURGEON AS A "BOY PREACHER."

I have been putting myself through every phase of thought and search on this lad and his mission, and I cannot anyhow think why it should be thought a kind of "sensationalism," or even "a questionable proceeding." From letters I have had, and by what I am obliged to hear, it is certain some good people do think it all that, and much worse. Have they forgotten the past, and the boy preachers whom God has abundantly and wonderfully used? Space will not allow me to refer to them all, but I have just turned up Mr. Spurgeon's Autobiography. In vol. I., page 199, there is a chapter headed: "The Boy Preacher of the Fens." It is certain that Mr. Spurgeon began to speak and preach when he was fifteen years of age. At sixteen he took his first formal service in a cottage.

It will, of course, be said, "But Mr. Cooke is not Mr. Spurgeon." No; neither is he anything like him in matter, or manner, or style. His whole trend of thinking is very different, and not so well defined, or so clearly expressed. There is no comparison between the two young fellows. But what of that? Mr. Spurgeon, as we have seen, was but a boy when he began preaching, but he was—as Jack Cooke is also—a boy with a message.

A MASTER OF ASSEMBLIES.

In years Jack Cooke is nearly sixteen. In some of his thinking and utterances he is far beyond that. In private, as in public, he has all the ways of a pure, simple, high-minded boy. He is dogmatic about the truth, and does not mince matters. Someone would think him a little hard at times. Whatever else he is not, he is a master of assemblies, and holds his audience from first to last.

I have ventured to write this, because we have most surely seen wonders of grace here during the past fortnight. If it shields the lad from adverse criticisms, I shall be glad; but I have written it for no other purpose except to glorify the Lord. We all here adore and magnify his holy Name for what we have seen and heard; and to Him we give all the praise.

MANY DECISIONS FOR CHRIST.

On Sunday afternoon we had a meeting for men only; and there were 2,000 men in the Tabernacle, made up of every type and class. There were hundreds who never go to any place of worship, and the deepest feeling possessed the assembly. There was no cant or vulgar excitement, but there was the manifest power of God. Over fifty men of all ages and of all sorts went into the inquiry room, and most earnestly sought the Lord. There were many bright young working men among them, and many decided for Christ, in a very calm and definite manner. At the evening service the place was packed immediately after six. Then we filled the hall behind. Mr. Cooke preached to both audiences, and there have been a large number of inquirers.

May I beseech all God's dear people to pray for this mission? Mr. Cooke will preach every night till December 22.

The Christian.

Notes & Comments

OWING to the intervention of the Christmas Holidays, and the consequent congestion of work at our printers', we are compelled to go to press very early with the present issue. Particular attention is drawn to the fact that our Donation list includes no gifts received after Thursday afternoon last. Such gifts will be acknowledged in our issue of January 2.

Time and Life. The close of the year finds most people in a mood of mingled retrospect and anticipation. It is not all who consider the mood in which both the past and the future should be faced. We are all older by a year than this time last year. Are we better or worse? Is our faith brighter or dimmer? Are we upheld or not by the sense of a guiding Hand and an all-wise Providence? These are questions that all should ask themselves. Our satisfaction with the past will be in proportion as we have recognised God, and served Him well in those days that are gone for ever. Our outlook on the future will be inspiring in proportion as we can realize God in them beforehand. There is an infinite difference between the man who is able to view past and future in this spirit, and the man who sees in the past only so much time gone or so much money made or lost. Time is but the husk of life, and is valuable only as we live to the highest ends in a humble spirit.

A Famous Christian Hymn. Prominence is being given to a suggestion that the house in which John Byrom, "the Manchester Poet," resided should be purchased and preserved as a memorial, on the ground of the excellence of his poems and his association with Addison and Steele in the Spectator. Byrom has, however, a greater claim to be remembered than this, for he was the author of a hymn which at this season of the year is sung by Christian congregations from one end of the land to the other; "Christians awake, salute the happy morn." It is by this inspiriting hymn, with its glad note of thankfulness and rejoicing, that Byrom's name will be handed down to coming ages, rather than by his contributions to the evanescent literature of his day.

Units and Crowds. Those who are disposed to take pessimistic views of, and to be impatient in regard to the seemingly slow progress of evangelistic work, should bear in mind that God's method is that of dealing with the individual, and not with multitudes. Even Pentecost was no exception. All Sunday-school teaching mission work, street preaching, tract distribution, comes under this rule, as indeed also does Zionism, for the prophetic promise of God to "them that come of Jacob" was "Ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel" (Isa. ii. 12). There is, therefore, no room for despondency, or for undue expectancy; "one by one" the great multitude that no man can number, will be made up.

The Zionist Movement. The remarkable development of Jewish Nationalism during the past few years will be forcibly illustrated by the Zionist Congress at Basle, which opens on the day after Christmas Day, and which will be attended by about 500 delegates, representing an electorate of a quarter of a million. These representatives come from countries as far distant as America and India, Scotland and New Zealand, and about five-sixths of them are university men. The movement is now strong enough to compel attention, and the practical consideration by Jews of the problem "where to go" can have but one result, the fulfilment of prophecy. Most of the avenues being closed, as, for instance, America, where already a million Jews have found a resting-place, there can be but one answer to the query: Palestine. A recent leading Jewish writer, Professor J. de Haas, said:

> On the land, then, the Bible is clear. Palestine is to be the eternal heritage of the Jewish race, and the future of that race is to be bound up in that of the land. The prophets repeat the promise in the darkest hours, it is to be the consolation of fallen Israel that they will repossess it . . . It is the Divine promise of national life that sustains them, and is the message they deliver to their suffering brethren.

The Need for Encouragement. A sympathetic hearer of sermons said recently that what he most missed in modern preaching is the note of encouragement. In reading the Gospels he found the most scathing condemnation of sin, but the most wonderful stimulus and helpfulness for the sinner. Nowadays there is too much fault-finding, too little attempt to awaken enthusiasm for goodness, too little exposition of the beauty and fragrance of the higher life. There is much in this criticism that is just. Jesus was an embodiment in his ministry of the prophetic word, "A bruised reed shall He not break; and smoking flax shall He not quench." Preachers should cultivate what has been well called "the wooing note." Souls can never be driven into the kingdom of heaven; but that they may be drawn into it from the very brink of the pit, is clear from the miracles of conversion that are recorded on every page of the Gospels.

The New Vista of Science. Things move so rapidly at the present time, that the news of Signor Marconi's success in transmitting signals from America to England by means of wireless telegraphy, has not astonished people as much as might have been expected. This, and other recent discoveries of science, equally marvellous, have a special interest for the Christian in a double way; they are revealing, ever more clearly, the wonders of the Father's House, and the wonderful wisdom of Him who has made all things perfect. As each new force comes to light, we ought to bow the head and worship. But these new discoveries, so rapidly succeeding each other, are silencing the bombast of those who have pretended that science can pronounce confidently against the truths of Revelation. The new science is entombing the old, and at the same time it is giving more and more proof of the truth of Revelation.

The "Red House" Scheme. The establishment of the "Red House" at Stepney, whilst not altogether a new idea, points the way to certain forms of Christian service which are imperatively demanded in poorer neighbourhoods. The "Red House" is practically a religious temperance hotel for working-men, the charges being merely nominal for bed and board; whilst in addition food is cooked for the neighbours, with all the advantages of perfect sanitation. The multiplication of such houses ought to "pay"—financially as well as socially and morally. In crowded areas it would be an unspeakable boon for unmarried men to reside in such an establishment, rather than seek lodgings in filthy and immoral homes. The unique feature of the "Red House" is that it is attached to a church, and is distinctly a Christian venture. We can quite see how such houses, properly managed, would not only be a paradise for the body, but also a great evangelizing agency. At least, the incitements to drink and to low habits would be materially decreased, and so the way made clear for the Gospel.

The Desire of the Slothful. Unfortunately there is little, if any room, to doubt that a large portion of the steadily-growing increase in the cost of poor relief is due to the influx of greater numbers of those who simply will not work. It is difficult for the charitable to weed out the undeserving from the deserving poor, but there need be no difficulty in the way of public bodies doing this drastically. Such action is not merely due to the overburdened ratepayer, it is in the interest of those whom sickness, or misfortune, or old age, have compelled to "go upon the rates." The Mile End Board of Guardians are, therefore, to be commended for leading the way in an effort to separate the slothful from those who are entitled to relief, their intention being that of relieving the ratepayers from the burden of maintaining > young men and women who seem to have lost all self-respect and aspiration towards self-maintenance by their own labour, and who are content to exist as parasites on the hard-earned wages of the industrious members of society.

This principle is older than the Poor Law, though it is in accordance with its real spirit, for St. Paul, nearly two thousand years ago, impressed upon the Thessalonians: "If any will not work, neither shall he eat."

Was the Early Church Episcopal? Following on the attack made by Canon Hensley Henson on the attitude of the High Church party on "Apostolic Succession," the Bishop of Salisbury in his new book "The Minister of Grace," deals a sturdy blow at the policy of exclusiveness. The book is a "series of studies in Early Church History with reference to present problems," and its outcome is to prove a fact well known outside sacerdotal circles—that the government of the Church was not episcopal in character till the third century. It is clear from the dismay occasioned by this position among sacerdotalists that there is a large section of students of ecclesiastical history who are quite ignorant of all the evidence except what has been sifted by their favourite authorities, and so arranged as to tell in favour of their own tenets. Otherwise the view propounded by the Bishop of Salisbury would not come with such a thunderclap on some of his "Catholic" friends in the English Church.

Wheels Within Wheels. It is rumoured that an attempt will soon be made to force the question of a Roman Catholic University for Ireland, and recently Mr. Haldane, a Scotch M.P., has been publicly advocating the concession, adding the words :—

> This may savour of denominationalism; but as England is governed according to English ideas, why should not Ireland be governed according to Irish ideas?

It is stated, however, in a letter to The Standard from Mr. McKeown, a Senator of the University of Ireland, that before Mr. Balfour's remarkable proposal of January, 1899, Mr. Haldane had been sent on a mission to Ireland to sound certain Irish politicians and to prepare the way for the suggestion, and Mr. McKeown says :—

> It is strange that while in Germany the Universities have been freed from ecclesiastical rule, and have been deprived of State functions because of corrupt practices, an enlightened British Government should endeavour to rivet ecclesiastical chains on the people of Ireland.

"Government, according to Irish ideas," simply means Rome Rule, with all its degrading serfdom, a fact which Mr. Balfour, with his personal knowledge of Irish politics, must know, even if Mr. Haldane does not.

The Success of Evening Schools. The Evening Continuation Schools were started to help young people who had left school for business, to make a good use of their leisure. The recent report of the Evening Schools Committee of the London School Board shows the most encouraging progress. The number of pupils admitted last session was 146,971, as against 125,640 in the corresponding period of last year, and there was a proportionate increase in the average attendance. The abolition of fees has not had any of the evil results prophesied; the number of pupils who begin but do not persevere, has not been increased, while it has brought a number of those into the schools who did not formerly make so good a use of their leisure. Nor have these schools shown any tendency to draw away pupils from the Polytechnics, but the reverse. There are so many insidious temptations which assail the leisure time of our young folk, that this educational movement, which aims at fitting them to carry on the process of education and start a lifelong habit of studiousness, is doing a great service for the rising generation.

Sunday Concerts. The Lord's Day question is again arising in the Middlesex County Council. On Thursday last a resolution was carried refusing to license Sunday music without the accompaniment of a religious service. Notice was given of a motion to set aside this arrangement so far as the Alexandra Palace is concerned. It is significant that one of the members was able to say that he had received letters against the Sunday concerts, but none in favour of them. We sincerely trust that the threatened reaction will be defeated.

On the Watch Tower.

"Thou remainest" (Heb. i. 11).

By Rev. W. T. TURPIN, M.A., Immanuel Church, Eastbourne.

THE close of the year brings vividly before us not only the rapid flight of time, but in various ways as well its changing scenes and fashions. It impresses upon our hearts the fact that all, even the best upon earth, fade as a leaf and vanish away.

Happy are they who have found a new home outside and above it all, and have found it in connection with Him who is there, so that the person of the Christ, and the place where He is, become everything to the heart; and we await his return, in the appointed time, when He shall change our body of humiliation, and fashion it like unto his body of glory. Until then may it ever be the constant joy and comfort of his own to move on with Him, not being borne along in the throng of the passing, careless world, but in all the true, deep sense of the words, abiding in his love!

THE GOD OF THIS WORLD.

What an unspeakable rest and comfort it is to have to do with Him of whom it is written, "Thou remainest," . . . "Thou art the same!" First, let us remark how important it is to see things as they really are; the tendency is in an entirely opposite direction, as a rule. Among men here in this world, things are not what they seem. The power of the god of this age in blinding the eyes is never more evident than when seen in his skill in wrapping the minds of men up in delusions and darkness.

This is evident in every department of human life—political, ecclesiastical, professional, and commercial; delusions abound on every side as the year closes and time bears us on its rapid stream onward to the end. That Satan is the usurper "prince of this world," and "the god of this age," is as clear as sunlight to every eye not blinded by his darkness; "the lie" and "the darkness" are the essential characteristics of his rule and dominion for a season.

As "the Times of the Gentiles" are speedily hastening on to their fulfilment, the voice which especially seems to sound both loud and clear in the conscience and heart, is, "It is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light."

THE STATE OF CHRIST'S CHURCH.

How solemn to mark the retrograde weakness and worldliness in the Church, and the recklessness and wickedness in the world. The bold and daring defection and departure from the truth on every side is one of those dials upon which we may read the hour of the world's age, and the lengthening shadows upon its face seem to intimate that its day is drawing towards a close. The most fitting words to describe the present moment are the solemn utterances of the prophet: "Truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter; yea, truth faileth, and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey" (Isa. lix. 14, 15). Yet in the face of it all, no pessimists would we be, because "the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither his ear heavy that it cannot hear;" and as the loyal and faithful heart enters into this, it responds with all courage and affection to his call, which reaches into its utmost depths: "But that which ye have, hold fast till I come" (Rev. ii. 25).

Standing then as we do upon the confines of the ebbing year, the question arises, and presses for an answer,

"WHAT OF THE NIGHT?"

The moral state of the world on the one hand, and the absence of our beloved Lord and Master from it on the other, constitute the world's night; there can be no light such as God delights in until the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his beams.

If we fix our eyes on our country with a retrospective glance, how very dark the night appears; we are far from saying there are no stars shining out in the thickening gloom; alas! they are few, but praise God, these are very bright. With regard to our interests abroad, more especially in South Africa, it is intensely sad and solemn to see how the war still drags on, especially when we remember the appalling sacrifice of life it has already cost.

OUR NATIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES.

"What of the night," as to this? Is there a voice of God to us as a nation, and what is it? Can it be that as yet we cannot be trusted nationally to pass on loyally and bountifully to those who come under our sway that Word of Life to which England owes all her prosperity and greatness? What about Egypt, on which we have our hold? What about the Soudan? Is it not perfectly true that the campaign of Omdurman had placed in our power a vast tract of territory containing somewhat like a population of sixty millions of people? What has England done for these as yet on a scale commensurate with such magnificent opportunity? Then, when we look at home, are there not features of that night, which are calculated to awaken most serious apprehension? The recent action of the French Government with respect to the Roman Catholic orders in that country, and the consequent incursion and settlement of these in our own land, cannot be contemplated without solemn concern.

Another significant mark of "the night" in connection with home affairs is found in that great dense, black cloud hanging over us in connection with the National Drink Bill—this for 1900 was the amazing, confounding sum of £162,163,474!! and this coupled with the investigations of the Harveian Medical Society, showing that 50,000 persons die annually in Great Britain through the direct effects of alcohol, causes a shudder.

Thus our national responsibilities at home and abroad call loudly to us to "humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God."

"Thou Remainest."

A STAFF FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Amid the rolling years of changing time,
The shifting sands upon the ocean shore,
The coming, and the passing, how sublime,
This thought—for evermore.

Eternal Life, beyond the changing years,
Unfailing Light, across the shifting sands,
Love, that 'midst surging waves of hopes and fears,
Like Rock of Ages stands.

Our loved ones come and stay, and swift are gone,
Spring hastes to summer's fulness, then away;
The early beauty of the dewy morn
Fades into dying day.

For evermore, our God, thy changeless grace,
That doth each wanderer with light enfold,
The same life-power that doth, in realms of space,
Each shining planet hold.

Thine evermore the same eternal love,
That knoweth not the shadow of a change—
The "parallax" that e'en fixed stars above
Reveal, in their vast range.

For ever Thou remainest—Thou whose name
Is Alpha and Omega—First and Last,
Jehovah-Jesus, changelessly the same
In future, present, past.

Thou, Lord, remainest; through the lifting gates
Of the New Year we pass, our hearts grow strong
In the blest hope for which creation waits
The new eternal song.

J. H. S.

Review of the Year.

As Time, the messenger with wings, is about to record the passing of another year, we would look back, with a religious interest, upon days gone by and the events which they have brought. To the reflecting Christian this should not be merely an exercise in modern history, but also an occasion for personal examination in the light of God's will, and the privilege of witnessing for Christ among men. While confining ourselves for a few moments to a review of outward occurrences, we would by no means overlook the importance of individual heart-searching, now that another chapter of our Christian pilgrimage draws to its close.

The year ends, as it opened, with painful evidences of the serious character of the conflict in South Africa. While from time to time reports have been received of success attending our arms, sorrow has entered thousands of homes through the death, either on the field or through the ravages of disease, of officers and men who had gone to the front. On the side of the Boers—brave, indeed, but misled to their sad undoing—much blood has also been spilt; and day by day many have prayed, and are still praying, that God will intervene in such a way that, with the cessation of hostilities, the government of South Africa may be placed on a stable basis, with attendant peace and prosperity.

POLITICAL EVENTS.

The year will long be remembered as that in which our noble Queen, Victoria the Good, finished her earthly course. For sixty-three years she reigned with reasonable pride over a people by whom she was loved with increasing affection, as the days of her pilgrimage and service under the King of kings were prolonged. At the advanced age of eighty-one she left earth with its turmoil and care; and her works do follow her. With universal acclaim Edward VII. succeeded to the throne. Long had he engaged our prayers as Prince of Wales and Heir Apparent. Now we know him as our Most Gracious Sovereign Lord King Edward and his fair consort as Queen Alexandra; and it is our privilege to invoke the blessing of heaven upon their life and work and influence. God save the King!

It is only the other day that Prince George, Duke of Cornwall and York, was created Prince of Wales. May he add to the charm and glory of the familiar title! With his beloved consort, so widely known as "Princess May," he had just completed a tour in which most of the colonies and dependencies of the Empire were visited. As the Lord Mayor of London said lately, on the occasion of the banquet given to the Prince and Princess at Guildhall—Africans, Australians, New Zealanders, Canadians, Cingalese, Indians, Maoris, and others, welcomed the travellers, and showed their evident loyalty to King and country. Lord Rosebery spoke of the voyage, with its visits to British Dominions Beyond the Seas as "majestic," and described it as "the most illustrious that has ever been chronicled in history." We can well believe that there is no exaggeration in this estimate, nor in the language of the loyal address presented by the Corporation, that the dignity, courtesy, and never-failing tact of the Prince and Princess "have confirmed and accentuated among our brothers and sisters in the many and far-off colonies and dependencies of the British Crown, that loyal love and attachment to the old country and its sovereign that has ever been their distinguishing characteristic."

A legislative measure of special importance from a social point of view is the licensing law which is briefly styled "The Children's Act." It has been placed on the Statute Book as the result of much agitation on the part of temperance reformers, and it comes into force with the New Year. The Act forbids the sale or delivery, save at the residence or working place of the purchaser, of any description of intoxicating liquor to any person under the age of fourteen years, except in corked and sealed vessels and in quantities of not less than a reputed pint. The penalty prescribed is not exceeding 40s. for the first offence. and not exceeding £5 for any subsequent offence; and like fines will be incurred, on conviction, by any person who knowingly sends any child under the age of fourteen to any licensed house to obtain strong drink excepting under the conditions provided. Though the Act falls short of fully meeting the desires of the friends of the young, it has been hailed with satisfaction as tending in the right direction. The "trade" has denounced it in a vigorous manner; but with wholesome reminders on the part of the police and their own protection societies, publicans are very generally displaying notices intended to prepare their customers for the inevitable.

RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS.

The year opened with an enterprise that will long be remembered. The Simultaneous Mission of the Free Churches was organized on a scale that was large beyond precedent, and carried through in a spirit of great hopefulness. The results were not what some expected, but all the same they justified the undertaking. Such as are in common speech called "outsiders" were not reached in the degree that was hoped, but many young people and persons in the habit of attending Divine worship were led to spiritual decision. Some of the ministers proved themselves excellent evangelists; others found out that they had much to learn before they could do that difficult work. Many pastors were rejoiced to find among the converts not a few for whose enlightenment they had long been labouring in prayer.

The Million New Pledges Crusade has been an enterprise in the interests of temperance carried out on a correspondingly large scale. Alas! that it should be needful to combat a widespread traffic that is only evil and that continually; and that so many moral and religious considerations should give urgency to the work of reform. Whether or not the full million of pledges are secured, there is this satisfaction, that an attack altogether heroic and singularly encouraging in its results has been made upon the citadel of strong drink. In this work Rev. Dr. Henry, of New York, has done splendidly. His addresses in some scores of the largest cities of England and Scotland have reminded many veterans of the orations of J. B. Gough. Certainly a mighty power has attended his words; and by the blessing of God the campaign will bear fruit for many days to come.

Another great religious movement has been that whereby it is hoped to send the light of Holy Scripture to the millions of India. The "Gospels for India" scheme is broader than its name. It is, as we have frequently explained, an endeavour to bridge the chasm between men, women, and children in Great Britain who have Bibles, New Testaments, and Gospels within their reach, and men, women, and children in India who are without the writings whereby God has revealed unto us his holy mind and will. In reliance upon God, and with his glory alone in view, one or two devoted souls set to work, and in a short time home agencies and workers on the foreign field were brought into line, with all the power of an organized body, to give effect to plans that were undoubtedly of God in their origin and development. As we have shown during recent weeks, children have their media and women theirs; then there are endeavours on the part of classes, official, professional, commercial, and so forth. For instance, medical men and lawyers at home are sending to practitioners in India, bankers to bankers, policemen to policemen. The seed of the kingdom is being sown; God will give the increase.

ROMAN CATHOLIC ACTIVITY.

In a certain sense Roman Catholicism is always active; but during the year now passing the activity has been exceptionally obvious and threatening in results. No sooner had King Edward ascended the throne than there was an outcry against the terms of the Declaration regarding the doctrine of Transubstantiation which has been subscribed by the rulers of Great Britain for two hundred years. Looking ahead, the wire-pullers of the Roman Church wished to relieve future rulers from the disability implied in the Declaration—the aim of which is to secure the Protestant Succession to the Crown, and nothing less. Romanists contended that the way should be open for kings and queens of this realm to follow what faith they might desire—meaning by this that they should be free to be Roman Catholics. Our forefathers, in putting upon the Statute Book the Bill of Rights, had in mind the true welfare of the people, and they knew by sorry experience that Romanism is nothing if not political, and that with a Papist on the throne there can be no true liberty. Yielding to the cry raised, the Government appointed a committee of both Houses to see whether the Declaration could be so modified as to be less offensive to Romanists. In due course a Bill was introduced into Parliament; it passed its third reading in the House of Lords—and that was the last of it! Evidence was not wanting that the Protestant feeling aroused throughout the country supported the Government in its attitude of caution and reserve.

Another aspect of Romish activity appears in connection with the dispersal of so many of the religious houses of France. The law against associations proposed regulations which comparatively few of the religious orders have accepted. Those "religious" who refused the terms, left the country, making for such lands as would receive them. In many directions they found obstacles; but none in England. They have come to our shores, monks and nuns, in considerable numbers, and many mansions and large houses in the provinces have been converted into monasteries and nunneries. Once again the cry has been raised as to "the coming of the friars." They do not come as of old, with a message or ministry for which people are waiting. They have not come for the public welfare, but for their own comfort. How long are we going to slumber in indifference while those of whom priest-ridden France is tired, acquire estates, organize industries, and, to use an Oriental figure, "eat up the inhabitants of the land"? We talk about giving asylum to pauper aliens. It were better to invite such to share the blessings of a free rule based on Protestant principles, than to fold our arms while agents of Rome, men and women who know no more of patriotic obligation than of spiritual freedom, come upon us like a cloud, bringing religious confusion, moral blight, and social distress.

WORK AND WORKERS.

In addition to much political distraction, and partly in consequence thereof, the year has witnessed a languishing condition of trade. There has been widespread straitness, and many religious societies and philanthropic agencies have been suffering from financial need. This has led to various acts of retrenchment, and to a general economizing of funds. Workers have often been at their wits' end, but for the most part praiseworthy patience and devotion have been shown. The work has been pushed forward, not because progress was easy, but rather because effort was urgent.

In India the recurring scourge of famine has invested Christian effort with peculiar difficulties. Looking further East, we have been privileged to see the resumption of work in China; many missionaries who came away during the Boxer rising, with its massacres, have returned, taking new witnesses for Christ with them.

God has taken many of his servants home during the year: President McKinley, by the assassin's hand; Revs. John Gritton, D.D., William Crosbie, and James Wall, after records full of honour and blessing; Mrs. Anna Shipton, a seer of spiritual visions, and Mr. J. H. Burke, a singer of spiritual songs. Among the sick have been Dr. Barnardo, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Robert Wilson and Dr. Harry Guinness. May these be preserved yet awhile for testimony and service.

As the last hours of the old year are passing, we wish our readers—A Happy New Year!

"What Mean these Stones?"

A THOUGHT FOR THE DYING YEAR.

Joshua iv. 21.

A VERY hasty glance back over the little narrative will suffice to show us the primary meaning of these stones. Their number was twelve, and they were to be grouped together, in obedience to God's command, to form a monument to his watchful care over his people Israel.

The thought is suggestive. As we stand in this twelfth month, on the verge of a dying year, "what mean these stones," these twelve months of God's providence and God's patience to each one of us his children individually? The careful pondering over one stone should humble us; surely the recollection of the twelve, with their marvellous record of mercies, should lay us very low at his feet.

Viewing these stones from God's side, it would be easy to inscribe upon each one a testimony to his care over us—His love, long-suffering, faithfulness, goodness, mercy, and so on; but how do we read the inscriptions that our consciences must needs write upon our side of the stones? Would they not be failure, disloyalty, half-heartedness, selfishness, pride, sloth, &c.?

My reader, let us remember stones are enduring. We employ them for the erection of our monuments to perpetuate the memory of our loved and honoured, our good and great; the inscriptions upon them last for ages, and are read by generations to come. Well may we ask in solemn warning—

"WHAT MEAN THESE STONES TO US?"

Probably we began the New Year of this new century with unwonted earnestness, full of hope and fresh resolves. We would endeavour by God's grace to live nearer to Him, to study his word more closely, to rise earlier in the morning in order to spend more time in prayer, to try and win souls for his Kingdom; but what do our stones record? Do they tell of service or stagnation? Of devotion or disloyalty? Of ardent love or of lukewarmness?

Maybe the year has brought us sorrow, physical pain, severance from loved ones, financial loss. Indeed, as we passed each month's milestone it seemed as if it would be far easier for us to sit down in weariness and despair upon it, rather than carry it forward to form a monument to God's glory.

Well, we pause for a moment on the threshhold of another year, with our twelfth stone in our hand, and ere we place it on the summit of "the pillar," I think our inscription must be, "Surely goodness and mercy have followed us." Then, turning to our own side of the stone, shall we not write—Lord, although thine eyes have marked our failures and our shortcomings, yet "forgive us all that is past, and grant that we may ever hereafter serve and please Thee in newness of life." Amen. T. P.

Notting Hill.

New Year's Eve.

LAYING THE HARP ASIDE.

I AM laying the harp of the year aside,
The harp that my fingers so long have plied;
So long that my spirit is loth to part
With the instrument dear to my saddened heart.

I am laying the harp of the year aside;
But, lingering ever, I hear abide
The happy strains I have played thereon,
In the happy moments for ever gone.

I must lay it by; but my hand will play
One other strain ere I put away
The dear old harp. 'Tis a note of praise
To the God of Love, for those bygone days.

'Tis morning! Lo, at my side I see
A fair new harp that is waiting me;
The golden harp of a bright new year,
And I wake its music with half a fear.

I take the harp of the good new year,
My finger moist with a grateful tear,
And find it tuned to the God of Love,
To the hallowed songs of the host above.

I thank Thee, Lord, for the harpstrings new,
For the holy love that is ever true.
Oh! teach me, Master, that this glad year
I may praise Thee better as heaven draws near.

Elijah: The Prophet of all Time.

By Rev. F. S. WEBSTER, M.A., Rector of All Souls, Langham Place, W.

VI.—Throwing Down the Gauntlet.

THE story of the contest on Mount Carmel is full of wonder and interest. We are not surprised that even the dull, gross hearts of the idolatrous and corrupt Israelites were stirred as they saw fire descending from heaven and consuming Elijah's sacrifice. And yet, for those who have eyes to see it, Elijah himself, as he stands braving the wrath of the king, and challenging all the congregation of Israel to witness the contest, himself the solitary prophet of Jehovah, and the 850 prophets of Baal, is a greater wonder than the opened heavens and descending flame.

We must not let our knowledge of the triumphant issue blind us to the seriousness of the danger Elijah was in. Obadiah felt that Elijah could only be delivered from Ahab's vengeance by being carried away by the Spirit of God far beyond his reach. He little realized how completely the wrath of man is subject to God's restraint, and how absolutely secure beneath the invincible shield of the Almighty are all who trust and obey.

Look, then, at Elijah. He is waiting for Ahab. He does not know how events will turn. He is content to take one step after another as God reveals it to him. But he waits without fear, confident of these two things: (a) the rain is at hand, and (b) in some way or other the sin of Israel's idolatry must be publicly condemned and punished.

Put yourself in Elijah's position. He is in the possession of a great secret. He is authorized to announce that the long time of sore judgment is at an end, that the hour of mercy and relief is at hand. How strong the temptation to use this knowledge to secure his own safety, and to regain favour with the king and nation. But he gives no thought to his own safety, he has no concern for his personal popularity. He is consumed by a passion for God's glory and a fervent longing to turn the heart of the nation away from idols and back to the living God.

THE PROPHET AND THE KING.

He deals first with the king. Ahab comes longing to let loose upon him the fury of his violent displeasure. But some power restrains him. "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" And as he said the words, echoing the wild complaint of the past three years, he felt the absurdity of his question. It was no general at the head of mighty legions that confronted him, no leader of sedition influencing a populace by violent harangues. In himself who of all the king's subjects was more harmless than this poor and solitary Gileadite? Clearly it was not Elijah, but the God in whose name Elijah spoke, that had brought judgment upon the land.

Ahab felt how false was the charge he made. The physician who declares the serious character of the malady is not the author of the sickness. The looking-glass that reveals the ravages made by care and time is not the cause of them; it was not Elijah, who had declared God's judgment upon a nation's sin, but Ahab and his father's house, which had caused Israel to sin, who were, in truth, the troublers of Israel.

Yes, Ahab knew it. For reasons of selfish policy, and to please his imperious wife, he had openly dishonoured Jehovah; and the whole land had been given over to idolatry. He had no answer to make. The specious sophistries with which he had silenced his uneasy conscience were shown up in their utter falseness as he stood in the presence of this bold champion of Jehovah. So he bows before the majesty of truth, and waits for the prophet to declare the next step in his campaign for the vindication of Jehovah.

Learn how invincible truth is. As Ahab and Elijah stand face to face, none can fail to recognise the true king. Ahab in his royal purple is small and contemptible in comparison with Elijah in his rugged honesty and fearless trust in God. The great man is he who is always making for a great object. We cannot all act on the same high level as Elijah, or before such a world-wide and age-long multitude of spectators, but each in his own small corner, and in his little day, may follow the same great end, and lose sight of himself in his devotion to God's glory and the good of those around.

Of course we shall be called disturbers of the peace. All God's faithful servants must be troublers of backsliding Israel. They reveal the unswerving righteousness of God. Their lives bear witness that God's commandments are binding, and must not be stretched to suit our convenience. Whether in business or in social life, those who make everything a matter of conscience, and seek to do all to the glory of God, are sure to be a trouble or annoyance to such as are lax and careless around them.

"TROUBLING ISRAEL": A PERSONAL QUESTION.

There is undying enmity and perpetual strife between the Seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent. No man can be loyal to God without stirring up that enmity. It is only in the dreamland of modern theorists that virtue wins universal homage, In daily life the Daniels and Josephs are plotted against, because their probity and virtue interfere with pleasant and profitable sin. Perhaps if you have ever been condemned as a troubler of Israel, it is because you have openly sided with God in the conflicts of your day. The man who drifts with the current never troubles it. The man who stands firm for truth and righteousness does.

But whatever the charge laid against him, the true man of God is sure to win in the end. The most abandoned, and such as are most full of hate, have a secret fear of God. Conscience is a secret ally, which at some time or other forces even the most ill-disposed to do homage to goodness and truth. Ahab had no power to resist Elijah. He fell in with the prophet's plan of campaign, and lent himself to it, carrying out his wishes as though he were his servant instead of his sovereign.

ELIJAH, OR THE PRIESTS OF BAAL.

And what a bold place it was! The whole nation was to be summoned to a solemn assembly. Before the parliament of the people the appeal is to be made to heaven, and God is to decide between Elijah and the priests of Baal. He begins by clearing the issues, and appealing to conscience and reason. "How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow Him; but if Baal, then follow him?" There was no answer. Not because human wisdom could not find one.

It was not the force of logic but the power of the Holy Ghost that reduced them to silence. "He is simply begging the question," would be the scornful answer of the modern infidel. Of course, if there is a God we ought to find out whether Baal or Jehovah be the true God. Let him first prove that there is a God, and we will soon cease our halting. But Elijah's appeal was to the conscience, and conscience forced them to accept the rebuke in silence. The people were convicted as much as the King. This solitary witness for God silenced the whole nation. Every mouth is stopped when God's truth is revealed.

The same appeal is sadly needed now. There are many halters amongst those who profess and call themselves Christians. There is dimness and slackness about their Christian life. God has no hold upon their hearts. Pleasure, wealth, fashion, splendour, rank—these are the real objects of their desire, these are what they really worship. They halt between God and Mammon. Their walk is uneven because their heart is divided.

Oh, that the prophet's words might ring with a clarion sound through all the churches! "If the Lord be God follow Him." Nothing is more unreasonable than religious vacillation and indifference. If religion be anything at all it is simply everything. Christ loathes lukewarmness.

Several Welsh Missionaries have recently set sail for their various spheres of labour in far-off lands. Amongst them are Rev. D. Picton Jones, who has been transferred from Central Africa to Matabeleland, and Rev. Dr. Phillips returning to Madras, India.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, December 29. 1 John iii.

O MY soul, dost thou realize that this is true of thee—that the Father has set his love upon thee, and has called thee to be his child, for such thou art? Does it matter to thee so greatly that the world passes by thee without recognition when thou art known in the mansions of eternity as the beloved of the great King, and there is a time when thou shalt shine as the sun, revealed, understood, manifested in the manifestation of Jesus Christ?

Thy Lord was manifested (5); He shall be manifested (2); He has taken away sin's penalty; his indwelling breaks its power; abide in Him; He is (2); He is pure (3); in Him is no sin (5); He is righteous (7); He laid down his life for us (16). Let Him abide in thee, and sin will cease to be the habit and practice of thy life. He will destroy the works of the devil in thy soul, and ultimately in the world.

If thou art indeed a child begotten of God thou canst not love sin; thou canst not hate; thou canst not shut thy heart against thy brother. Open thyself to the love of God. Love is life. Let love reveal itself in act. Love must give its best. And if thou livest thus in love, thou shalt be true, and shalt stand before God with an uncondemning conscience, knowing that He accepts thee in Christ (19). Then thy prayer will be full of faith and power, and thou shalt abide in Him, and be infilled by his Holy Spirit. Purity, love, truth, these three are one—the apparel of the sons of God.

MONDAY, December 30. 1 John iv.

There are many spirits and false prophets in the world to-day: Christadelphianism, Christian Science, Spiritualism seek to seduce the souls of men. The one supreme test is given in the second verse. When the spirit acknowledges that Jesus Christ is God incarnate, we may accept it as speaking from God; otherwise it is the spirit of anti-Christ. It is not enough for us to be enamoured by the outward beauty of the forms of truth, we must penetrate to the heart. Specious arguments and beautiful words may deceive us. We must test the spirit, the essence, and the heart, of systems which accost us and demand allegiance.

Let us beware of that which is popular in the world. The fact that the world flocks in its vast crowds to a religious teacher is no proof that he is divinely sent, but the contrary. The world heareth them because they are its children. Only those who are of God care for the things of God. These false systems will ultimately be overthrown before the Gospel, because He who is in the Gospel, and in our hearts, is greater than all the power of error and hate. Dost thou long to overcome? Then let the Greatest of all indwell thee.

It is meet that the Apostle of love should speak of love, but love cannot be separated from its source, which is the very heart of God. We must know God, therefore, in order to love; but as we love—that is, as we make others the object of our thought, and minister to them by word and act—we shall know God. There are dark times in all lives, but see that your sky be not darkened by fear or hate, which love casteth out. A more perfect love will give you deliverance from the shadows which have obscured the blue sky; and when all else fails, know and believe the love which God hath towards you (16).

TUESDAY, December 31. 1 John v.

Dost thou believe that Jesus is the Christ? Thou art a child; and true love to God will lead thee to love Christ and thy brothers and sisters in the family of God. Wouldst thou increase thy love? Then keep his commandments, which are not grievous (3) when once they have been chosen by the will. When we begin to obey we find them good and acceptable. Wouldst thou overcome the world? Live in thy sonship, and realize the enduring world to which thou art attached, and thou wilt not be deterred by fear, or flattered by the vanity of this transient scene. Wouldst thou have a stronger faith in Jesus Christ? Let the Holy Spirit bear witness to Him.

Every life must have its altar and the laver. Through all the ages God is bearing witness to his Son, and in all true hearts the Spirit of God bears testimony to the truth and glory of Jesus. That witness may not come to thee in an audible voice, but thou wilt be aware that through fellowship with Jesus Christ thou art brought into the enjoyment of eternal life, and as that life springs up within thee, it will be its own supreme witness to the truth of revelation.

No child of God should rest content with anything short of the knowledge and assurance of eternal life. If you lack that assurance, see if you are sinning against the law of perfect love towards some brother or sister. Put right the wrong within you, and the light will shine.

The child of God has great boldness in intercessory prayer. When we are living as we should, we may go into the presence of God with an assured faith, and God will give us life for others. Let us make great requests, sure that our Father is a great God, to whom what is difficult and impossible to us is a very little thing. Go on thy way, O Christian soul whom God hath begotten! There is no need for thee to remain under the captivity of sin. The only begotten Son of God will keep thee (18, R.V.)

With what a sublime outburst the Epistle finishes! There are three things we know (18-20). We know Him Who is true. We are already drinking at the fountain-head of eternal life. What arguments are these that we should guard ourselves from idols, which are the appearances of things, lest we miss Christ, the Divine reality, which satisfies the soul!

WEDNESDAY, January 1. 2 John.

The Scriptures include every kind of literature—history, poetry, proverb, argument, treatise. It was befitting that there should be one or two specimens of Christian correspondence, and we are favoured with two exquisite specimens of such letter-writing as the Holy Spirit could indite and use—the models on which holy men and women have fashioned their correspondence ever since. What courtesy, what grace of style, what weight of matter in how few words may be crowded into a short letter to a friend, when the love of God is in the heart! Many scent their writing-paper, but their words are vinegar or pepper; let us scent our thoughts, and the paper may take care of itself—it will be preserved till it is brown with age.

All love is founded on sincerity and truth. Do not say more than you feel—feel more than you say. And that you may feel as you should, get into the right attitude with those around you, and then look up to God to breathe into and through you his own perfect nature, which is love. Be true. You will only know truth intellectually when you have received it spiritually.

When we walk in truth we obey the Father's law (4), and when we walk in love we obey the same law (6). Therefore truth and love are different aspects of the same attitude towards God and man. And whilst we love those that hold the truth, we cannot help being in antagonism to those who oppose it, or disseminate lies (11). Such high themes are consistent with all natural yearnings after human friendship.

THURSDAY, January 2. 3 John.

Another gem of Christian letter-writing! If all our friends were in physical health as they are in spiritual, according to the Apostle's wish (2), some of the weakest invalids would suddenly arise in robust health, and abounding energy, whilst large numbers would be pining invalids. But too many are not specially solicitous that they should ail nothing spiritually, so long as the body is healthy.

Gaius walked in truth (3), therefore he walked in love (6). Nothing is so hostile to love as insincerity. There must be absolute transparency and confidence if the blue sky of perfect love shall overarch your heart and life. The love of this good man was shown in his kindly offices to the Gospel preachers of his time, who, for the sake of the Name (see R.V.), had gone forth on their sacred errands, taking nothing of the Gentiles. He set them forth on their journeys, worthily of God—in other words, he gave them as much attention as if he were entertaining Christ Himself, and in doing this, he became a fellow-worker with the truth (9).

All men were not like Gaius, and the like-minded Demetrius (12). In almost every Christian community there is a Diotrephes, who will not do good himself, and hinders those who would. But there was a Judas among the Apostles, and these men test our true character, and exercise the strength of our patience and steadfastness.

FRIDAY, January 3. Jude.

There are close resemblances between this epistle and the second epistle of Peter. Evidently it emanated from the same school of thought.

The inscription is very beautiful—"Called;" "Beloved in God;" "Kept for Jesus Christ."

The motive for writing was the havoc caused by false teachers, whose character and life belied their words. These wolves in sheep's clothing were injuring the flock, and grievously imperilling the progress of the Gospel; and therefore the saints are asked with all the urgency possible to language, to resist them, and contend earnestly for "the faith," which was originally delivered to the Church, as the trustee of God's truth for man.

But what traps and pitfalls beset us! What a danger there is that we should stumble to our fall! (24 R.V.) And how many have fallen, who seem to have as good or a better chance than we have! The angels kept not their first estate. Adam, though created in pristine innocence, fell. Cain was rejected; Balaam, who saw with open eyes, was slain on the battle-field, as a reprobate. Korah, who carried a censer filled with holy fire, was hurled for his sins into the abyss. How shall we stand, where so many have fallen! Be of good cheer! He is able to keep you from falling.

For you, all that is necessary is to keep in the right attitude towards Him. Build up yourself in your faith, pray in the Holy Spirit, keep yourself in the main current of God's love, and look for the mercy of God. Some day you and I will be set before the presence of his glory without blemish to his exceeding joy, and ours.

SATURDAY, January 4. Revelation i.

From Jesus Christ, as man, during his earthly life, the day and hour were hidden (Mark xiii. 32); but now the Apocalypse was given, that He might encourage his servants through the long, dark centuries by the gleams of light, and the final glory, which would most certainly accrue. Note the special blessing on those who hear and keep these words.

In the fourth verse we have the Blessed Trinity. In the fifth verse Calvary, where Jesus consummated his witness as the faithful martyr; the resurrection morning, on which He was born out of death; and his ascension to the right hand of God. In the sixth and seventh verses, the first and second Advents. In the eighth, the assurance that all being, all creation, is ensphered within his glorious Nature.

One of the sights of my life is to have seen the isle that is called Patmos, where the risen Lord met his beloved disciple. I like that conjunction of words, the kingdom and patience; they teach us that the kingdom may be won, not only by fighting and working, but by suffering. There is as much strength shown in beds of pain as on the battlefield or among the harvest sheaves. Would you have the vision of Christ? Wait till you get to your Patmos of isolation, loneliness, and suffering, and it will be given. The Lord appeared to his servant as High Priest and King. Let Him be your First and Last, at the beginning and at the end of all your work, all your years, all your life. Ever think of Him as the Living One. Do not look for death, but for Him. Remember that the keys are in his hand, and believe that He will go before you, opening all gates that threaten to obstruct your way, even those of the unseen world.

A Congo Pioneer.

REV. GEORGE GRENFELL.

THE departure of Rev. George Grenfell for the Congo, in September last, recalls the life and labour of a noble missionary pioneer. As a missionary explorer, Mr. Grenfell's reputation ranks high; there burns in his soul the passion which occupied Livingstone's heart for the uplifting of Africa.

For many years African missionaries have dreamed of the establishment of a continuous line of stations across the vast continent, from Zanzibar on the east to the mouth of the Congo on the west. This dream at last seems in a fair way to being realised. The late Mr. Robert Arthington, who had previously taken great interest in the Congo Mission of the Baptist Missionary Society, before his death gave a sum of £10,000 to that Society in order that the gap between Yakusu, the farthest inland station from the west, and the nearest post of the Church Missionary Society (a distance of some 370 miles) might be explored and brought under the influence of the Gospel. It is with a view to the accomplishment of this that Mr. Grenfell has once again embarked for the Congo.

George Grenfell was born in August, 1849, at Sancreed, four miles from Penzance. When the child was but three years old his father removed to Birmingham, where George was educated at King Edward's Institution. Although his parents were connected with the Church of England, the lad attended the Sunday-school of Heneage Street Baptist Church, the minister of which at that time was the late Rev. Samuel Chapman (afterwards of Melbourne). Under that fruitful pastorate the boy decided for Christ at the age of fifteen, and became in due course a Sunday-school teacher. He speedily developed interest in missionary matters; Africa from the first captivated his fancy, and Livingstone's expeditions and Moffat's travels were read with avidity. At length Mr. Grenfell entered Bristol College, and in December, 1874, in company with Alfred Saker, of saintly memory, he set sail for the Cameroons.

Four years later the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society decided to inaugurate work on the Congo river, and the choice of pioneer fell upon George Grenfell and Thomas Comber, who accordingly reconnoitred the country, and succeeded in obtaining permission for a station to be established at San Salvador.

Two years afterwards, Mr. Arthington, having contributed £5,000 for the cost and maintenance of a mission steamer, Mr. Grenfell came home and superintended the construction of the Peace. The vessel having been floated and taken to pieces again for transport, Mr. Grenfell left Liverpool on December 9, 1882, with his precious charge, and safely arrived at Stanley Pool. Two engineers were sent out from England to reconstruct the vessel, but just before reaching the Pool they were attacked by fever, and died. In this extremity the resourcefulness of the explorer manifested itself. Mr. Grenfell set to work to put the vessel together himself, and in three months, with native assistance, the boat was complete and ready for the water! In June, 1884, he was able to inform the committee that the launch had been safely accomplished, and a trial trip run.

Up to 1887 the Peace had made several considerable journeys, traversing nearly the whole of the 5,000 miles at that time known to be navigable. During one of these expeditions Mr. Grenfell discovered the Mobangi River, respecting which The Times declared that since the discovery of the course of the Congo itself no more important addition had been made to the hydrography of that region, and that the commercial importance of the discovery could not be exaggerated. When Mr. Grenfell came home in 1887, the Royal Geographical Society awarded him their gold medal for the year for his great exploratory work, and the additions which he made to the knowledge of the geography of Africa.

Having returned to the Congo, Mr. Grenfell was soon recalled to England (in December, 1890) to superintend the second and larger steamer, the Goodwill. After having, in due course, seen this boat put upon the Congo, a new duty fell to the lot of the missionary. It having become desirable for the southern frontier of the Congo Free State to be definitely settled, Mr. Grenfell, at the request of the King of Belgium (who is also Sovereign of the Free State), acted as Delimitation Commissioner on behalf of the State. This task occupied nearly two years, and necessitated 1,000 miles riding on oxback. The delicate and responsible duty was performed to the entire satisfaction of the Sovereign, who created his commissioner a Knight of the Order of the Golden Lion, Mr. Grenfell also receiving a decoration from the King of Portugal, who was the second party to the Commission.

One painful feature in the history of the Congo Mission has been the very heavy loss of life amongst the workers. Mr. Grenfell has seen the passing away of many with whom he had come into personal contact, and he is now, with the solitary exception of Rev. W. Holman Bentley, the philologist and translator of the Mission, and author of that substantial work, "Pioneering on the Congo" (Religious Tract Society), the oldest worker remaining on the field. Mr. Grenfell lost his first wife (Miss Hawkes, of Birmingham) within a year of the marriage, and in March, 1899, his daughter, Patience Elizabeth, passed away at the age of eighteen. This sad feature of the work still continues, for in the 1900 and 1901 reports four and five deaths are notified respectively.

Yakusu, the inland station already referred to, was established in 1896, since which date no advance has been made on the upper river. On the lower river, however, Matadi has been occupied as a base station, and Kibokolo, a new inland post, taken up as a Comber Memorial station. For a number of years Mr. Grenfell's "home" station has been Bolobo, on the upper river. Here are the harbour and dockyard for the two mission steamers, and here also is a printing office, where work is done not only for stations connected with the B.M.S., but also for other Congo missions, and the Free State and French Congo Governments. Bolobo comprises a continuous series of houses along the river bank for a distance of five miles, while other towns, densely inhabited, are within easy reach.

Before his last visit to England, on furlough, in company with Rev. W. W. Stapleton, Mr. Grenfell made several journeys eastward from Yakusu. Being disappointed by one route, they tried another, ascending the Aruwimi River for 100 miles, until they came to the falls of Yambuya, whence they proceeded by canoe for another 150 miles, reaching a point about midway between the Congo and the Nile. By-and-bye Church Missionary Society workers, penetrating from the stations on the East, will, by a journey of equal extent, reach the same point. Then will be realized a long-cherished ideal in African exploration; and the interior of the great continent will be claimed as never before for Christ and his Church.

At the autumn meeting of the B.M.S., at Edinburgh, Mr. Grenfell delivered an address on, "The African—not a Passing, but a Coming Race." "The increase of the black population," he said, "is an important question for civilization." The negro was despised by many as inferior, but those who had lived amongst them had learned to love them, and had observed the greatest promise for the future in their character. But the only hope for the days to come was in the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. They had tried it, and seen its great results, and they recommended it as the one and only cure for the great wound of Africa.

Mr. Grenfell's recent furlough extended over eighteen months. His health had been seriously impaired; but when he left for his sphere of labour he was in the enjoyment of much of his old vigour.

As chairman of the Congo Mission Executive, Mr. Grenfell is beloved and trusted by all his colleagues, and is the friend and adviser of all. His varied experience of pioneer work, and his profound sympathy with the degraded and suffering peoples of Africa, mark him out as the man for the difficult and dangerous task now to be accomplished, and many will be the wishes and the prayers that this devoted servant of God, who has already been enabled to do so much useful work, may be spared to see the achievement of great things in establishing a continuous line of "stations of the Cross" from East to West of the Dark Continent!

Come In.

Beneath the midnight stars the bells are pealing;
The long nights shorten, brighter days begin;
The first faint footfall of the coming spring-time,
New Year, come in.

In the street shadows tattered wretches shiver,
Hopeless and homeless, 'reft of kith and kin;
Open a door to them—thy sister, brother,
And say, Come in.

Tell him who sees no star in the thick darkness,
A drifting wreck amid the reefs of sin,
Even for him God has prepared a refuge,
And say, Come in.

Gipsy Smith's Career.

We heartily commend to the notice of our readers the autobiography, Gipsy Smith: His Life and Work. (6s. Thomas Law, Memorial Hall, E.C.) We join in the general hope and prayer that many chapters will yet be added, seeing that our friend is as yet only in his forty-second year.

The present publication is, nevertheless, opportune. Christian workers and young converts all over the three kingdoms and in America will welcome a record of the Lord's dealings with one whom they not only honour but love. Gipsy Smith has been led out into "a large place;" he has been used to do "great things" among the children of men; but it is always the Lord who is in the forefront, and to whom the glory is ascribed. The ordinary laws of cause and effect break down in accounting for the lives and doings of those who are greatly used of God. In an introduction which expresses the minds of many more, Rev. Dr. Alexander Maclaren thus refers to the duty lying on the Church of "evangelizing every creature":—

Gipsy Smith has remarkable qualifications for that work, and has done it all over the country with a sobriety, transparent sincerity, and loyalty to the ordinary ministrations of the churches which deserve, and have received, general recognition. But what he has not, is as instructive as what he has. He is not an orator, nor a scholar, nor a theologian. He is not a genius. But, notwithstanding these deficiencies in his equipment, he can reach men's hearts, and turn them from darkness to light in a degree which many of us ministers cannot do.

The account of his father's conversion and subsequent life for Christ is full of interest; but the reader will naturally place more importance on the story of how, on November 17, 1876, Rodney Smith himself came to know the Lord Jesus Christ as his Saviour. Though then in his seventeenth year, he could only spell and understand words of one syllable. Many a time he wept and prayed over his Bible; but now he had within him the impetus requisite to compel him to seek education. His great desire was to be a preacher of the Gospel, and his progress was so rapid that on June 25, 1877, he became one of the evangelists of the Christian Mission, of which Rev. William Booth was then head; and in the natural course became an officer of the Salvation Army, when that name was adopted.

A TRIBUTE TO GENERAL BOOTH.

Good work followed at many places, his last appointment under the Army, and his "greatest battlefield," being Hanley. Though he was dismissed in 1882, Mr. Smith places on record an expression of "the warmest feelings of love and admiration for General Booth," whom he he believes to be "one of the grandest men that God ever gave to the world."

Friends in Hanley at once made arrangements to support Mr. Smith as an independent evangelist, and the work of God proceeded without interruption for a number of months. Then came an invitation from old friends at Hull, and after an interval spent there, and more work at Hanley, Gipsy Smith set out on the great career of usefulness among the churches, which has now lasted for more than sixteen years. He had more than once before conducted missions in connection with the Manchester Wesleyan Mission, when, after his first visit to America, he was invited on his return to take up work there for a year. This led to the removal of his home from Hanley. He is still a warmly-attached member of this congregation, where he has found a large number of his closest friends.

The proposal that he should become the evangelist of the National Council of Free Churches originated with Mr. Smith's own minister, Rev. S. F. Collier; but when once made the suggestion commended itself to all, and on September 1, 1897, he took up the position he now holds.

Regarding the work done in connection with the Simultaneous Mission, a letter is given from Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, who says:—

From the outset Gipsy Smith secured the ear of the people, and soon he had the joy of winning their hearts for Christ. He emphasized the need for repentance and the necessity for the new birth. He denounced every form of evil, and warned men to flee from the wrath to come. He preached a full and free salvation, and illustrated all with thrilling incidents culled largely from his own wonderful experience. It was evident at each service that he had spoken to good purpose. The demonstration of the Spirit was never lacking. No sooner was the address over than scores were ready to testify to their desire to be saved and to respond to a singularly persuasive appeal to "come along" into the inquiry-rooms.

Writing again eight months later, Mr. Spurgeon adds:—

Converts resulting from Gipsy Smith's missions are still appearing, and asking to be united with God's people. Those who have already joined us seem to be of the right sort, and these later applicants are bright examples of Christ's power to keep and save.

The book is a valuable addition to the literature of aggressive Christian work. The pages abound with homely anecdote and incident, told with the utmost simplicity and naïveté; but they also contain, to use the words of Dr. Maclaren, "striking and welcome evidence that there are no hopeless classes in the view of the Gospel."

The Late Mr. John H. Burke,

SINGING EVANGELIST.

The announcement in a recent issue of the death, on Wednesday, November 20, of Mr. John H. Burke, revived many memories of successful Gospel work both in this country and America. Though, like many more who have been prominent in evangelistic effort, Mr. Burke came to us from the United States, he was a native of Clonmel, County Tipperary, having been born there on April 17, 1855. During his early life his father was steward of an estate in that county, and there the boy grew up, till at the age of fourteen he was sent to Dublin. There he entered a business house, serving an apprenticeship, and remaining for four and a half years.

Other members of the family had gone to America, and were settled there, when in 1873 his parents and he bade farewell to Ireland, and made their home in the city of Chicago. In that city the future song-preacher again applied himself to business, entering the service of a firm with which he remained till the end of 1879.

Mr. Burke had been brought up in a Christian home, and under such favourable influences he was led at a very early age to ponder the things of eternal life. His parents were Episcopalians, and, until he went to Dublin, he regularly attended the services of the Church of Ireland. On their arrival in Chicago, the family joined the congregation which had been founded by Mr. D. L. Moody, and even then commonly known as "Moody's Church." The first Sunday, after morning service, one of the members spoke kindly to the young man who had come among them, asking him if he had given his heart to Christ, and after a moment's thought he said "Yes!" That was his first out-and-out declaration of faith. He joined the Church as a member shortly after, and also a Bible class connected with the Sunday school, which was under the superintendence of Mr. J. M. Hitchcock. Later on he became a teacher himself, and then, a leader of the singing being required, Mr. Hitchcock asked him if he would undertake this work, and with trembling he consented. On the platform he gained his first experience of public singing, and occupied this position for about two years.

Mr. Burke's musical training had been begun before he left Dublin, where he learned to read music. The turning point in his career came when he heard the late Philip P. Bliss sing the Gospel in "Moody's Church." A great longing then awoke within him to follow the lead of that honoured servant of God. He at once began to devote himself to the study of music and voice culture; and came to the front in 1879, at the Farwell Hall services in connection with the Y.M.C.A., where he took charge of the choir for about three years. In 1880, Mr. Burke was married, and removed soon after to Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, and uniting with the local Congregational Church, of which he and his wife were long members. After a time Burke went back to business for about three years, until the increasing claims upon him from meetings, conventions, &c, forced him to make a definite choice between his singing and business; and about 1884 he gave himself entirely to music as a profession, teaching, leading choirs at conventions, &c.

In 1886 Mr. Moody held a great mission in Chicago, and the committee arranged with Mr. Burke to lead the choir and take charge of the singing. It was then that, following Mr. Moody's urgent advice, Mr. Burke gave himself to evangelistic work. He has since been a fellow labourer in memorable missions with Messrs. Moody, Whittle, Fay Mills, and John McNeill—evangelists whose names and work are known in all English-speaking lands and beyond. In January, 1891, Messrs. McNeill and Burke were brought together by Mr. Moody, and of their mission labours and journeyings in company our pages have borne frequent witness.

A profound impression was made by the tour on which Mr. Burke accompanied Mr. McNeill through the United Kingdom in 1892-94. At Glasgow a meeting was held afterwards with over 500 persons who had professed conversion in the course of a three weeks' mission held in Hengler's Circus. From all parts of the country there were testimonies to the wonderful work that had been done.

Very strikingly Mrs. Burke passed away on the day after the funeral of her husband. When the fact of Mr. Burke's death was telegraphed to Mr. Sankey, he replied by wire that a letter of condolence was on the way to the stricken wife. From the hour the telegram arrived Mrs. Burke awaited anxiously for the letter; but before it came she died. Mrs. Burke was born in Chicago in 1858.

Mr. Burke went into business in the town of Wheaton last year, and it now appears that the drain pipes of the house in which they took up residence were faulty. Sewer gas was the cause of death in both cases.

In the December number of The Institute Tie—the monthly devoted to the interests of the Moody Bible Institute—the editor says:—

We cannot let this issue pass without referring to the loss the church has incurred in the unexpected home-going of Mr. Burke. We also feel a personal loss in the temporary ending of several years' fellowship in Christ.

Mr. Burke was associated with Mr. Moody for many years as an evangelistic singer. About three weeks ago Mr. Burke came to the Institute to dinner. Plans were talked over with him by which he could fulfil his heart's desire to get back into the work, and beginning at New Year he expected to go out under the auspices of our Extension department. His ministry on earth has been suddenly cut short, but to-day he is singing the song of Moses and the Lamb among the redeemed

Work in Hungary

A WELL-INFORMED and experienced Christian has told us that, besides the Jewish Mission in Budapest, there is not much evangelistic activity in Hungary. This may be owing, in part, to the want of zeal in the Protestant Church, in part also to the jealousy of the nations of this composite kingdom towards one another. The minor half of the Hungarian population are Magyars, and their endeavour is, as speedily as possible, to Magyarize all other nationalities within their border.

Forty-two years ago a German congregation was formed in connection with the Scottish Mission to the Jews. An evangelistic spirit was made evident in opening the way for Sunday schools and deaconesses. Through the connection of the pastor with Bible and tract societies, the country was provided with the Scriptures and Christian literature.

The national jealously affected even the believers, so that at the time of the celebration of the millennium of the Hungarian monarchy a united front seemed to be an impossibility. But God chose this time for a starting point in united Christian effort.

A deputation, composed of the Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh, Dr. Baedeker, Colonel von Knobelsdorff, and Herr Vischer Sarasin, was sent by the Evangelical Alliance to present the prayerful congratulations of its members to the aged King of Hungary (the Emperor of Austria). Days followed not to be forgotten, during which the deputation gave their testimony in various places, and the praise of God was sung in many languages.

A TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

After this a Conference on Home Missions was held in the German community in connection with the thirtieth anniversary of the first deaconesses in Hungary.

Colonel von Knobelsdorff is the president of the Blue Cross Society in Germany (similar to our Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance movement), and on the occasion of his visit a branch was established in Hungary, of which Herr Biberauer is the president. Dr. Clark, of Prague, sent a devoted Christian worker—Mr. John Chorvat—who, having been required elsewhere, was ultimately succeeded by Mr. Thiesen, who was sent to Budapest by Pastor Lohmann, and is supported by the German Committee of the Blue Cross Society. Mr. Chorvat and Mr. Rohacek, both trained at St. Chrischona, also represent the B.C.S. among the Slovaks in the Karpathian mountains. The B.C.S. has ten branches in Hungary—the largest in O'Tura, where the three sisters mentioned in my letter, "A Day of Small Things," say that as soon as the people are converted they give up smoking and drinking of their own accord; showing that the Gospel, truly preached, is the mightiest factor in producing temperance.

These friends at O'Tura have for some time been endeavouring to obtain permission for tract-distribution among the mountain population, who speak the Slovak language only. A friend in England has even forwarded the first year's salary for a colporteur; but there seems such a fear of a political panslavistic agitation, or such a jealousy of the language, that the required permission has not yet been obtained.

Homes for deaconesses, Sunday-schools, Y.M.C.A.'s, religious societies, and other evangelistic agencies are on the increase in Hungary. The report of the British and Foreign Bible Society says that a progressive activity is shown by the National Bible Society of Scotland, the Religious Tract Society, the United Free Church of Scotland, and other Missions to the Jews. The Romish Church is busy building new convents and schools chiefly in Protestant districts.

The annual assembly of the Danube District of the Reformed Church was held on October 21. The ex-Prime Minister Tisza, Dr. A. Szilassy, Professor Szabo, and others were present to discuss some important questions pertaining to a more devoted and aggressive Christian life. Professor Szots gave an address on the necessity of home mission work, and how it could be done. A series of practical resolutions was passed with this end in view.

THE JEWISH MISSION.

The Jewish Mission in Budapest, under the superintendence of Rev. Andrew Moody, D.D., includes all the agencies of a well-organized mission—day schools, Sunday schools, Bible classes, medical work, tract distribution, &c. There are many Jews who are convinced, and who publicly testify that Jesus is the Messiah; but they do not come forward for baptism, shrinking from the decisive step which would cut them off from their families, or not seeing their way to earn a living.

In the course of last year Dr. Samuel Kohn published the statement that 144 persons had given notice of their intention to leave the Jewish congregations. Among these were men in the Civil Service, educational, and other students. "Many Polish Jews," adds Dr. Kohn, "have gone over to Christianity, which is to be attributed chiefly to the activity of the Scottish Mission."

The Jewish people are not opposed to the evangelical schools, but the officials seem to regard bitter opposition as a duty, and this has considerably reduced the number of children on the roll during the past three years.

The teachers are efficient, and devoted to their profession. Mr. Victor, superintendent of the Sunday-school, has prepared a new Hungarian Hymn-book, many of the tunes in which are from the Sacred Songs and Solos.

Dr. Lippner passed through the Medical Mission last year 587 patients, of whom 247 were Jewish. He finds that the Gospel does not meet with the same hostility as of old. I think there may be more than one reason for this.

In connection with the National Bible Society of Scotland in Hungary, Dr. Moody employs fourteen colporteurs besides those connected with the Jewish Mission. The sales of Bibles, Testaments, portions, and books for the year amounted to about £1,010.

Dr. Moody's colleague, Rev. J. T. Webster, in whom energy and enthusiasm are combined with common sense, makes frequent evangelistic tours in Hungary. He has spoken during the past year with 1,320 Jews and Jewesses, including those visited, and those who visited him in Budapest, and those dealt with on his tours.

THE OTHER SIDE.

There is a reverse side to this picture of Christian work, and, when every encouragement has been noted, over a wide area, we are bound to say that the sons of this age are for their own generation wiser than the sons of the light.

There is a commerce in these lands pursued with a wisdom which descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, demonish. The skill, forethought, and cunning with which the traffic in young, inexperienced, and often innocent girls is carried on leaves nothing to be desired by the prince of darkness. When a victim has been ensnared, the first thing is to remove her to a country whose language she does not understand, and where she is absolutely at the will of her captors. I heard of fourteen girls at Port Said, each of whom believed herself to have been married to the man who brought them there. They are deported to many markets, veritable prisoners and slaves.

Not, of course, that all these girls were innocent or ignorant of evil when they fell into the hands or these slave-dealers; or that, being ignorant, they could long remain so. One of the most terrible concomitants of this inhuman and dehumanizing traffic is the degrading effect upon its victims, who in their turn become the birds of prey. India receives many. South America imports a large proportion—Buenos Ayres is said to be par eminence a hell upon earth. But it must be difficult to adjudge the worst place. All great cities have their denizens, for whom a great American preacher said that if there were not a hell there ought to be.

An International Congress on this burning question was held at Amsterdam in October. Nothing more imperatively calls for legislation. All people who desire home happiness and domestic purity must be interested in the efforts of all national and local vigilance associations, for no one knows how soon or how acutely a great wind from the wilderness may smite the four corners of the house where their sons and daughters are eating and drinking. And it is not every head of a family who is as faithful a priest in his own house as was the patriarch Job. R. C. M.

Needs of South Africa.

THE great need of South Africa and the openings for Christian work throughout that country were vividly presented at a reception in connection with the Baptist South African Colonial and Missionary Aid Society held in the King's Hall on Tuesday evening of last week. The chair was occupied by Mr. T. Burnham King (president of the South African Baptist Missionary Society since 1884, and president-elect of the South African Baptist Union), who referred enthusiastically to the interest taken by the late C. H. Spurgeon in the affairs of the Baptist churches in Cape Colony, and pointed out the extent to which educational work of the most hopeful kind was lying ready to hand. Looking to the future he said he believed that within the next five years the European population will almost treble, while there are millions of natives who have never been brought into touch with the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The opportuneness of the proposed effort for the strengthening of the already existing agencies was emphasized by Rev. J. R. Wood (Upper Holloway), and was followed by Rev. Charles Spurgeon, who recalled the impressions made on him during his visit to South Africa in search of health. "Our brethren in South Africa," he said, "deserve to be helped and supported on account of the most heroic work they have accomplished already, without aid from the home country."

THE MINING COMPOUNDS.

Rev. Thomas Chapman—who left England in 1898 to enter on the pastorate of Troyeville Baptist Church, Johannesburg, and who expects to return early in 1902—said there were thirty Baptist churches in South Africa, twenty-four of which were English, and six German. Twelve of the English churches were self-supporting. The South African Missionary Society has twelve missionaries, who are doing a remarkable work. They wanted to establish strong churches in all the towns, beginning at Johannesburg, where there are but two at present. Along the thirty miles of the gold-mining district there are sixty native compounds, and from 500 to 6,000 natives live in these, according to size. Missionaries can go and preach in the compounds, and natives who have been converted under their teaching are known to have carried the Gospel home to far-distant kraals, whole districts being thus evangelized. They desired also to train native evangelists. He believed there was a bright future for South Africa if the Gospel were preached.

INVITATIONS FROM CHIEFS.

In the Cape Peninsula there are 40,000 coloured people or half-castes, descendants of the first settlers and the natives. Natal has, besides 100,000 natives, coolies (emigrants from India), outnumbering the Europeans; and there are large bodies of them also in the Transvaal and Cape Colony. Cape Town houses 13,000 Malays, professing Mohammedanism. The Chinese are found in large numbers in the various towns. In Orange River Colony, including Basutoland, there is a vast native population waiting to be evangelized. Zululand and Amatongaland have 200,000 of the finest men and women in the whole of Africa. Many applications have been received from Zulu chiefs for missionaries to be sent, and offering land on which to build churches and houses for the missionaries, but these applications cannot be granted for lack of men and money. The honorary secretary is Mr. R. Howard Henson, 19, Furnival Street, E.C.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

I recommend my ELDER "Young People" to read every week what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find in the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful thoughts and illustrations for Sunday talks with their young folk. See next page.

"If I Were Rich!"

[The following little story is very appropriate for this Christmas season, when I am sure the hearts of most of us are full of thoughts of doing good. I hope it will prove a stimulus to many of my young friends to seek out opportunities for generous actions.—UNCLE TOM.]

KATIE and Jack stood at the window watching the people who passed. It had been a snowy day, but the sun coming out bright and clear in the afternoon made the streets wet and sloppy.

"See that poor little girl," exclaimed Katie; "how wet her feet must be! Her shoes are full of holes. If we were rich we might buy shoes for her."

"And for that boy just behind her; his shoes are worse than hers," added Jack.

"And if we were rich we might buy a shawl for that old peanut woman. See, she is trying to get those children to buy peanuts from her basket."

"How poor she looks! There comes a real old man; if I were a rich man I would just call him in and say, 'Here, old man, here's some dinner for you, and take what's left for the children.'"

"Now, if I were rich," exclaimed Katie, "that is the one I would help, that poor, sickly woman with a baby in her arms."

The children's mother had been listening to what they said. She sat sewing near the window. "I am glad," she said, "to hear my children express such wishes, but wishing is not giving. Just to say, 'Be ye warmed and be ye fed,' will not make these poor people any less cold or any less hungry. You say that if you were rich you would help this one or that one. God does not ask you to give as if you were rich, but he does ask you to give according to your means. Now let us see what you have to give, and then we can tell how your good wishes will help those poor people."

All the money the two children had to spend they kept in their little boxes in the nursery. They ran upstairs, and placed in mother's lap the contents of the banks. Katie had six shillings; Jack had five shillings. Jack had spent one shilling of his money in getting his skates mended.

"Now, Katie," said her mother, "how much of this will you give to carry out your good wishes?"

Katie thought a moment, and then replied, "Well, mother, I think I ought to give the half."

"I know that poor woman who passed just now with her baby in her arms, and I know that she is a very worthy woman. What would you like to give her?"

Remembering how poorly the woman was clad, Katie suggested a shawl.

"Now, Jack, what will you give to the poor boy who had on such a miserable pair of shoes?"

Jack thought he could send some money to keep the boy's feet dry, and he consented to give shoes.

The next day mother went out shopping with the two children, and as the result they brought home a warm shawl and a pair of stout shoes. Mother had added a little to the amount they had to give, so that the shoes were thick and stout and the shawl was good and warm; for mother knew both the poor woman and the poor boy, and was quite sure these articles were needed.

"You have given what you had to give," said mother, "and that is much better than wishing you were rich so that you might give more. Always remember that, while God does not ask for that which He has not given you, He does ask for that which He has given."—Selected.

A Christmas Song.

O JOYFUL December!
The month we remember,
The birth of our Lord from on high,
How glad was the singing,
The angels were bringing,
"A Saviour to you has drawn nigh."

He came to a manger,
On earth was a stranger.
He left his bright home in the sky.
His love and his pity,
In village and city,
There's no one who dared to deny.

Our Saviour so holy,
Was treated so coldly,
We wonder, and cannot tell why.
At last He was taken,
By friends all forsaken,
On that terrible cross to die.

But a message of love,
Has come down from above,
From the Lord who has gone up on high,
That the child who believes
And the Saviour receives,
Shall be with Him in yonder bright sky.

24th Quarterly Prize Competition.

OCTOBER TO DECEMBER.

RULES.

☞ Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following rules is STRICTLY OBSERVED, especially Nos. 5, 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right nine times out of twelve.

2. Competitors will be divided into FOUR DIVISIONS:—
   I. Those under TEN years of age.
   II. Those over TEN and under THIRTEEN.
   III. Those over THIRTEEN and under FIFTEEN.
   IV. Those between FIFTEEN and EIGHTEEN.

3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "PRIZE COMPETITION," and the NUMBER of the DIVISION to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom," as usual.

4. At the top of your paper write very clearly your DIVISION, your FULL NAME and ADDRESS, and AGE last birthday.

5. The questions must be answered in the RIGHT ORDER. The answers must be written on either FOOLSCAP or QUARTO size sheets, and on ONE SIDE of the paper only. NUMBER YOUR ANSWERS exactly to correspond with the questions.

6. Every paper must be SIGNED by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.

7. No CONCORDANCE and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. ☞ Competitors must not help each other.

8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Wednesday Jan. 9. The results will be announced on Jan. 16.

9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, &c., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.

10. CHAPTER and VERSE must be given wherever possible.

11. Those who cannot do ALL the questions set for their division must do AS MANY AS THEY CAN, and will receive marks accordingly. No PAPERS can be re-examined. And don't forget Rule 5!

☞ Any seniors who are over Eighteen years of age may do the Competition, and have their names included in the lists, but will not be eligible for the prizes.

Numbering Our Days (Psalm xc.)

THIS psalm was evidently composed towards the end of the wilderness wanderings. It partakes something of the sadness which must have lain heavily on the heart of Moses, as he saw all the companions of his early life dropping around him, and being carried one by one to their graves in the sand dunes of the wilderness. It was as though he heard the Almighty saying to the people whom He had brought out of Egypt, "Return to dust, ye children of men."

He compares the centuries to the memory of yesterday, which fades so quickly from our mind; to a watch spent by the camp fires; to the short rush of the mountain flood; to the dream which flashes for a moment across the mental eye; to the short-lived grass, which flourishes in the morning and is cut down at night. Each emblem is full of significant beauty, and is evidently culled from the incidents of the long march through these vast solitudes. It was as though the heart of the mighty servant and man of God turned perpetually from the transientness of the ages and the decay of human life, to God whose being is timeless, unchangeable, and eternal, the everlasting home of his saints. Here is transientness, change, failure; there is the Rock of Ages, with its everlasting stability and glory.

From the flight of the centuries Moses turns to passing days of human life, and compares them to a sigh (9. R.V., margin). So sad, so weary, so anxious! He enumerates the brevity, the sorrow, the sinfulness of life, and out of these there springs the cry of our motto. Let us number our days against the eternal ages of God's being. Let us number our days against the age of the mountains and the universe. Let us number them against the rise and fall of great nations, compared with which our life is as a coral insect in comparison with the growth of the coral reef. It is when we know how short our life is that we set ourselves in good earnest to redeeem it, and give each flying moment something to keep in store.

The heart of wisdom will show itself in giving God a just proportion of our time. In every day it is wise to give God his share for the readlng of his Word, and prayer and holy fellowship. In every week it is wise to reserve a seventh part of the time for his holy service. We may learn deep lessons from the amount of time the Hebrews gave to their religious institutions. Lord Cairns was careful to give an hour before breakfast in each day of his busy life; Hudson Taylor was accustomed during his tours in China to give two hours in the middle of each night, when the native inn was quiet. Luther used to say, "I have so much work to do to-day that I must give at least three hours to prayer." "Prayer and provender hinder no man," says the old proverb.

It is wise to use every minute of life for some good purpose. It may be physical exercise, which is necessary for the health of our well-being; it may be recreation which recruits the exhausted mental energies; it may be intercourse with a friend which enables us to gather from his experience, or to discuss matters of common interest in the kindling light of love; it may be study or duty, or the claims of social life, but we should seek to make each hour tell upon the whole result of life, fitting us to do better work in the world, or leaving a distinct mark for good on those around us. Sometimes when I have been left stranded on the platform of a railway station in some country district, I have bent my thought on how to make the best use of the half-hour or hour. One may have a Bible in one's pocket, or may be able to take a brisk walk and get exercise, or may find a lonely soul to whom it is possible to give a draught from the water of life.

It is specially wise to take God at the beginning of the year to be our Guide, that He may show us how to use this precious thing called life, so brief, so soon expended, capable of such vast issues for good or evil, and certain to exert so great an influence upon our eternal destiny. Apart from Him, all our desire to use our time aright will be in vain. We shall constantly be making mistakes, going up blind alleys, making short cuts which are much further round in the end; beginning things which we shall have to drop, and missing opportunities which stood before us like open doors. But when the soul is in fellowship with God every blow tells. Every day adds something to the growing power and influence of existence, and every year passes to render its account, with every page filled with the record of earnest service.

In my young days I kept a diary, and it had this effect at least, of leading me to number my days. I recommend the practice to my young brothers and sisters; and let them remember that sometimes days that seem in vain, filled with little things, are nevertheless valuable as teaching lessons of patience, submission, and faith in the Eternal Father. Nothing is little, nothing trivial, nothing unworthy, if your soul holds fellowship with God.

Then will come satisfaction and gladness (verse 14). God's work, and glory, and beauty, will burst upon the soul (16 and 17), and the work of our life will be established by the Divine hand (17).

The Promise of Power (Acts i. 1-14).
Golden Text: Acts i. 8.

THE Book of the Acts of the Apostles was written about the year A.D. 63, in the Greek language, and most probably at Rome by Luke as a sequel or continuation of the Gospel which bears his name. He had been an eye-witness of the events he describes, and to his own evidence were added the testimonies of several other witnesses also (Luke i. 2, 3; Acts i. 1).

The design of the Book of Acts is to narrate the fulfilment of "the promise of the Father," by the descent of the Holy Spirit, and the results of the effectual preaching of the Gospel of Christ among both Jews and Gentiles; also intermediately it shows the ground plan (so to speak) of the organization of the Church of Christ on earth.

1. What were the infallible proofs by which the Lord showed Himself alive to his disciples after his suffering?

Jesus talked with them (John xx. 21).
,, walked with them (Luke xxiv. 15).
,, sat at meat with them (Luke xxiv. 30).
,, ate before them (Luke xxiv. 43).
,, showed his hands and feet to them (Luke xxiv. 39).
,, ,, Thomas his side (John xx. 27-29).
,, allowed Thomas to touch Him (John xx. 27-29).
,, ,, them to clasp his feet (Matt. xxviii. 9).
,, ,, ,, to see Him ascend (Acts i. 9).

2. What was the "Promise of the Father?"

The gift of the Holy Spirit (John xiv. 16-18, 26; John xv. 26, 27; xvi. 7-15; Joel ii. 28-30).

3. What is the difference between the kingdom of Israel and the kingdom of God?

The one was an earthly and the other a spiritual kingdom. The disciples had not yet had their understandings opened (Luke xxiv. 45).

4. Where was Jesus standing when He ascended?

On the slopes of Olivet, about three-quarters of a mile outside Jerusalem, near the village of Bethany—the only place where Jesus seems to have felt He had anything like a home on earth—in the house of Lazarus, Martha, and Mary.

5. What were the feelings of the disciples as they returned to Jerusalem? and why? Great joy (Luke xxiv. 52).

6. Why did they go by mutual consent up into the upper room? (Acts i, 13, 14.) It was probably the room in which they had eaten the last supper with Jesus. They had probably rented it since (Matt. xxvi. 18). There was a prayer meeting on the first Lord's Day, and Jesus came and stood in the midst (John xx. 19).

Application.

1. May we claim the promise of the Father? and what will the Holy Spirit do for us?

(a) Show us our need of a Saviour (John xvi. 8). (b) Reveal Christ to us as a Saviour (John xvi. 14, 15; 1 Cor. ii. 10). (c) Enable us to trust Jesus (1 Cor. ii. 2, 4, 5). (d) Shed abroad the Love of God in our heart (Rom. v. 5). (e) Teach us how to pray (Rom. viii. 26). (f) Guide us into all truth (John xvi. 13).

2. How can we be witnesses for Jesus, and where? The disciples witnessed to what they had seen Him do. When we know Jesus as our own personal Saviour, we, too, shall be able to > Tell to all the world around

> What a dear Saviour we have found;
> Then point to his redeeming blood,
> And say, "Behold the way to God."

Where are we called upon to witness? At home (beginning at Jernsalem), at school, in the class, and the playground (Luke xxiv. 47), or in the workshop or workroom, and among our companions in the recreation field. "Ye are my witnesses" (Luke xxiv. 48).

It is from the ranks of the faithful home-witnesses that the Lord calls his servants and soldiers for public work.

A NEW YEAR'S PRAYER.

O GOD,

By thy Holy Spirit,

DO

for me
in me with me
by me

as Thou wilt,

THIS DAY,

for Jesus Christ's sake,

Amen.

Power from on High.

The electric car is worked by means of an unseen power conveyed along the wire lines over head; but that power, strong as it is, cannot move the car until the mast-arm of the car rests on the overhead wire. Immediately the connection is made between the two, then the car is set in motion along the lines. Power from on high is to be had for the asking (Luke xi. 13, with verses 9 and 10). And just as earnestly and continuously as we link our weakness on to Almighty Power, so will the wheels of our life run smoothly and safely on the lines of God's perfect plan, and our thoughts, words, and actions will be guided by his Holy Spirit for his glory and our eternal welfare.

If we want power to serve God, we must do as the disciples did—wait on God for his Holy Spirit.

How can we be witnesses for a risen Saviour? What proof have we had that He lives? Because He has forgiven my sins, and He hears and answers my prayer. He speaks by his Word to my heart (John xiv. 20). He ever liveth to make intercession for me (Heb. vii. 25; John xiv. 19).

The great work of our life is to believe Jesus, to learn of Him, and then to witness for Him by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Obituary.

REV. THOMAS WAKEFIELD.

A DISTINGUISHED missionary is removed by the death of Rev. Thomas Wakefield, of the United Methodist Free Churches, which took place at Southport on December 15. Mr. Wakefield, who was sixty-five years of age, entered the ministry in 1858, and, after brief service in home circuits, he assisted in the establishment of the Mission in East Africa. His long services in the foreign field made him widely known as a missionary, a traveller, and a translator. He was elected President of the United Methodist body in 1888. We hope to give a portrait and sketch of Mr. Wakefield's career in an early issue.

Million New Pledges Crusade.

CAMPAIGN AT BROMLEY.

THERE was earnest expectation to hear Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and the Fisk Jubilee Singers on December 18, when over 2,000 people gathered in the Grand Hall, at Bromley. Meetings were held afternoon and evening, presided over by Mr. E. AISBITT GIBSON and Mr. T. LAMB respectively. Dr. Henry was unable to fulfil his engagement owing to illness, and much sympathy was felt by the audience with the able and devoted advocate of the total abstinence cause, in his indisposition. The Jubilee Singers were present, and sang beautifully. Addresses were delivered, in Dr. Henry's absence, by Mr. G. A. BARCLAY, demonstration secretary, Mr. F. J. LOUDIN, of the Jubilee Singers, and Mr. ROBERT WHYTE, jun., of Bromley, all of whom spoke earnest and telling words. Between the meetings a reception was held in the Wesleyan schoolroom, where Rev. E. LIGHTWOOD SMITH presided, and encouraging addresses were given by Mr. M. H. Hodder, Mr. William Green, and Rev. R. Silvey. The demonstrations will doubtless result in an increased realisation of responsibility to combat the drink traffic.

DEVONSHIRE SQUARE BAPTIST CHURCH, N.

A largely-attended meeting was held in Rev. G. P. McKay's church, Devonshire Square, Stoke Newington, N., on Thursday last. Dr. Henry was unable to be present, but the demonstration was of a hearty and inspiring character throughout. The Jubilee Singers sang an extra number of their exquisite pieces, to the great delight of the audience. Colonel MORTON, who presided, referred to the far-reaching influences for good of the Million Pledges Crusade, and to the large measure of success with which it had been crowned. Mr. G. E. MORGAN, M.A., spoke forcibly to Christians, pointing out that since we do well to remedy the keen suffering and extreme poverty caused by strong drink, surely we take the wisest and most effective course when we attack the central cause, the drink traffic itself. The speaker dwelt on the responsibilities of Christians in the matter—"to him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin"—and appealed for unity and zeal in the advancement of the abstinence cause. Mr. G. A. BARCLAY also spoke pointedly on the subject, founding his address on the words of David: "Is there not a cause?" (1 Sam. xvii. 29), and tracing much of the powerlessness that is found in the churches to the want of a definite testimony against the traffic which afflicts the land. He gave some striking instances of rescue from drink which had come under his personal knowledge during a long experience, declaring that without the power of God to keep such results would be unattainable. The Gospel of Christ is the power which alone can break the bonds of this or any other sinful habit.

FUTURE MEETINGS.

The Twentieth Century Christian Temperance Campaign:—Rev. Dr. Henry and the Fisk Jubilee Singers will resume their meetings towards the end of January. Jan. 23, Nottingham; Feb. 1-9, Dublin.

Moody Bible Institute.—The December issue of The Institute Tie—a monthly devoted to the interests of the Moody Bible Institute—is a Moody Memorial Number. Besides the usual matter, it contains special articles on "Time's Endorsement of Mr. Moody's Methods and Ideals," and "The Conversion of Valentine Burke," as told by Mr. Moody.

Gospel Literature for Returning Soldiers.—Since the beginning of the South African War Mr. W. Punter, Wesleyan naval and army scripture reader, has been constantly visiting the troopships at Southampton. "Until within the last six months," he writes, "I have had a good quantity of Testaments, Gospels, and suitable booklets and tracts. As ships are still coming and going at the rate of six or seven a week, literature is still much needed, but I am quite out of supplies."

Evangelistic.

Rev. J. Grange Bennett in Leeds.

THE visit of Rev. J. GRANGE BENNETT to Trinity Wesleyan Church, Leeds, December 1-10, was eagerly anticipated by the new and rapidly-growing church. A mission band paraded the streets before the services, accompanied by a harmonium on a waggon. Notwithstanding the toil and prayer of the workers and the powerful preaching of the missioner, the outsiders were not got to the services in large numbers until the second Sunday. Morning service and the men's meeting in the afternoon were special seasons of blessing. The crowning point of the day, however, was in the evening, when between thirty and forty young men and women came out for Christ. The following evenings also witnessed many decisions for the Saviour. The service for new converts, held the night after the missioner departed, was a precious season, and on the following Sunday evening, when the pastor, Rev. W. SPINK, preached, there were more cases of decision.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond in New York.

A mission to children and young people was commenced in Bethany Church, New York, on Lord's Day, December 8, by Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND. Speaking at the evening service, Mr. W. Nesbitt, formerly of the "San Francisco Occident," spoke reminiscently of Mr. Hammond's long career as an evangelist. "Nearly thirty years ago I remember to have heard that there was a large delegation of Christian and prominent business men from St. Louis going to visit the State capitol to hear Mr. Hammond speak. He had been specially invited to address the Senate and House of Representatives by a joint meeting of the two bodies. Hearing of this invitation delegates proceeded from other parts of the State also, and went to the capitol to hear the address. Mr. Hammond was known then, as now, as the 'Children's Evangelist.'" At the Monday afternoon meeting, Miss Robinson, who has been examining the children brought to the Lord at the People's Church, East Eleventh Street, during Mr. Hammond's recent work there, reported that most of those who had been dealt with gave satisfactory evidence of a change of heart. Many more children at the afternoon service professed to trust in Jesus, and experience a change of heart.

CHARLES W. BALCH.

Gorbals United Free Church, Glasgow.

Though the date for carrying on the Simultaneous Mission within the bounds of the Glasgow Presbytery is still a long way in advance, some of the churches, recognizing that the need for the holy war is ever urgent, have been campaigning on their own initiative. In Gorbals United Free Church there has just been brought to a close a twelve days' mission, which has had in it many elements of cheer for those most closely associated with it. The minister of the church, Rev. D. C. MACNICOL, possesses the evangelistic gift, and quite recently took part, by invitation, in the Simultaneous Missions of the Edinburgh and Dumbarton Presbyteries. The services in Gorbals Church have been addressed by a number of different ministers, and the closing address on Wednesday evening, 18th instant, was given by Rev. Dr. HOOD WILSON of the Barclay U.F. Church, Edinburgh. It has not been our lot for a long time to hear a more refreshing and simple Gospel address from any minister of the Gospel. His exposition was based on Rev. xxii. 17, and the whole address from first to last was full of light and help for anxious souls.

Mr. Macnicol has in the vestibule of the church a "post office." He describes it as an "institution," an institution we think that many churches and ministers might well copy. The church post office is simply a box, called "the minister's box," into which any in spiritual difficulty drop a line, inviting the minister to call. Into this post office a number of requests were dropped throughout the mission, some of which betokened great anxiety of soul.

Open-air work was carried on each night, prior to the service indoors, the district in which the church is situated lending itself easily to such work, as it is a densely populated one. The minister's verdict is that great good has resulted from the out-door meetings, and he feels strongly that the churches ought to undertake a great deal more open-air work than they do.

J. C.

The WEAVER BROTHERS are conducting a mission at the Baptist Church, Camberwell New Road, S.E. At the close of the services on last Lord's Day, a large number of adults and young people went into the inquiry room.

E. B. T.

At Sheffield Road Baptist Church, Barnsley, an encouraging ten days' mission has been held, conducted by Rev. F. C. SPURR. Preceding the mission services, a week of prayer meetings was held, at which addresses were given each evening by various Free Church ministers in the town. Large congregations were present, and much good was done, both in stimulating church members and in the impression of sinners. Sixty-three pledge forms were taken, and many of these have been returned signed.

Mr. WILLIAM FORBES held his last London meeting of 1901 for theatrical women and girls, on Thursday last at Orange Street Chapel, Leicester Square. After tea, there were solos, hymns and addresses. Mr. Forbes is about to hold similar meetings in the provinces.

Rev. E. A. STUART, vicar of St. Matthew's, Bayswater, has held a fruitful mission in the parish of St. George's, Leeds, of which Rev. J. C. Wright is the incumbent. Mr. Stuart's clear, direct, and powerful teaching caught hold upon the people. The congregations increased night after night. On the second Sunday the large church was crowded to overflowing, worshippers being even seated on the pulpit stairs; and the thanksgiving service on the last day made a profound impression.

The Work at Costers' Hall.

HOXTON is now to be regarded as a densely crowded, or over-populated quarter of London; and Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P., who has been an honorary evangelist for forty years, is a veritable veteran in the service. He was a trusted friend of the late Lord Shaftesbury; and as an active member of the Council of the Ragged School Union, he is a fellow-worker with Lord Shaftesbury's successor, the Marquis of Northampton.

The far-reaching, comprehensive work at Costers' Hall has, through the Divine blessing, been greatly indebted to the work of one man. When the work was founded in Golden Lane, a mile away, soon after the middle of the last century, that locality was one of the plague-spots of London, more likely to inspire despair than give encouragement to one who offered the Gospel to those who were low down in squalor and depravity.

The way in which the mission prospered, however, in due time to arise in renewed life at Hoxton, is a romance connected with Christian work. Mr. Orsman has achieved nothing less than the feat of gathering around him a large band of workers who belong to an aggressive working church. The extensive Sunday school, the regular Gospel services, the Bible classes, and many other agencies, are together a fine testimony to the power of religion over the working classes. Street-traders also have facilities for holding their club or business meetings in suitable rooms, thus being drawn away from the public-house.

The endeavours which have recently been made to hold meetings for "ragamuffins," or boys and girls who do not attend Sunday school, have been altogether successful. It will also be borne in mind that a great deal has been done at Costers' Hall in the way of providing cocoa breakfasts and Irish stew dinners for poor day-school children, who on winter days do not get enough to eat. The deserving poor, especially children, on the one hand, and the aged on the other, are not forgotten at Christmas. The current expenses are extremely small in comparison with the magnitude of the work done; but as old subscribers die, new ones are needed to keep up the supplies. Mr. Orsman's address is Milton House, Shacklewell Green, N.E.

About Books.

MANY interesting and entertaining glimpses of old-time village life is given in The Hill of Fire. The pages are full of interest, the characters are well drawn, and, once commenced, the book will be read through with eagerness and pleasure. (2s. Religious Tract Society.)

Keynotes to the Happy Life. By Mrs. Charlotte Skinner. (1s. Partridge.) These are helpful words from a pen which has given us several good things in past years. While calculated to be of service to many workers, these chapters will be specially valuable for reading at meetings of women.

In the compilation of The "Christian Progress" Almanack for 1902, Miss A. M. Boys has displayed the spiritual insight of one who is well acquainted with the need of the human soul. The daily texts are selected and arranged with thought and care, and will cheer and encourage many whose pathway through life may ofttimes be clouded and dreary. (1d. Bemrose & Sons.)

The Morning Watch for Soldiers of the King: Devotional Meditations for Each Day of the Year. Compiled, selected, and arranged by Rev. George Coates. (5s. A. H. Stockwell.) For every day there is a Scripture excerpt, and then a brief reading completing the page, with an occasional poetical selection thrown in. Over a hundred and fifty authors are represented —various in complexion, but combining to make a very helpful book.

In the Days of the Dragons: Talks with Boys on Some Subjects of Interest to Them. By E. C. Dawson, M.A., rector of St. Peter's, Edinburgh. (1s. 6d. Seeleys.) "Neither sermons nor essays, but simply plain talks," says the biographer of Bishop Hannington in the introduction to his book. The chapters are designed to prepare our lads so to meet temptation as to become "more than conquerors" through Christ.

The Subjects of the Shah; or, the Land of Pussy Cats and Poverty, Etiquette and Error, Rags and Ruins, Sunshine and Sadness, Indolence and Ignorance, and Priests and Apathy. By Rev. Charles Harvey Stileman, M.A., C.M.S. missionary in Persia. (1s. C.M.S. House.) A remarkably interesting book, fully illustrated. After describing the people and their need, the author tells the story of the C.M.S. work in Persia. Bishop Moule writes a hearty preface.

An important addition has been made to Nelson's "New Century Library," in the form of a pocket edition of the greatest works of John Bunyan, The Pilgrim's Progress, the Holy War, and Grace Abounding. By the use of thin paper these are comprised in a handy pocket volume. The size is only 6¼in by 4¼in, and but half an inch thick; the type is large and clear. (Cloth 2s. 6d. net; leather 3s. 6d. net.) The book is a triumph of compression without the sacrifice of any element of usefulness or beauty.

Mr. Elliot Stock has issued a cheap edition (5s.) of The Dual Land: Being a collection of verses from many sources for the great family of those who have been, who are, and who may be, bereaved. The collection is remarkably full—the poems numbering a good many over a thousand, and being indexed as to first lines, titles, and authors. On such subjects as Death and Separation, Resurrection and the Eternal State, there is probably no more comprehensive selection of poems, some familiar, some gathered from less known sources. The book has light and comfort for many sorrowing ones.

The Vicar and his Friends is a volume of homely conversations reported by Cunningham Geikie, D.D., LL.D. (5s. nett. Longmans.) Delighting to meet kindred spirits with whom to discuss subjects of mutual interest, the Vicar is a well-informed and communicative man. Like Bunyan's Mr. Talkative, he is ready to talk of "things heavenly or things earthly; things moral or things evangelical; things sacred or things profane," as well as on topics which it would be difficult, if not impossible, to classify. A glance at the pages shows that bishops and their duties, civilization and its characteristics, clerical types and functions, women's rights, the progress of thought, religion, sacrifice, and immortality are among the scores of topics on which, in reply to his friends, the vicar opens his mind. On some points we think but little of his views and opinions; on some we should like to put him a few questions. Nevertheless, he is an interesting man, and leads us into many a bypath of instruction. Whether or not we agree with him, his remarks are always worthy of respectful attention.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR LETTERS FOR CHILDREN are being issued by Mr. A. N. Pitton, of 63, Finsbury Pavement, E.C. These are novel in form and illustration, being presumably written by Old Father Time, and containing a "Word in Season" for the little ones. In packets of twelve (including miniature envelopes) 6d.

Seasonable Appeals.

Mr. A. McGOVAN, secretary, London Christian Cabmen's Association, pleads for help in ministering to the spiritual and temporal needs of the night cabmen. Address, 213, Walworth Road, S.E.

Miss KIRBY, Cerne Abbas, Branksome Park, Bournemouth, of the United Kingdom Beneficent Association, pleads for poor gentlefolks struggling to maintain an existence on very scanty incomes.

Writing from the Protestant Governesses' Home, 22, Chatham Place, Brighton, Miss KINGDON sets forth the needs of distressed governesses and elderly gentlewomen. "I have had such painfully sad cases to help."

From the Hope Mission, Friar Street, Blackfriars Road, S.E., Miss ANNIE MARTIN, hon. secretary, writes on behalf of efforts in the interest of the poor widows of the district. A dinner and tea are to be provided, and also gifts of coal.

The honorary secretaries of the Homes for the Aged Poor, Miss E. G. and S. A. HARRISON, 5, Grandacre Terrace, 86, Pengc Read, Anerley, S.E., appeal for funds to supply 173 inmates with coal and extra comforts during the winter months. Fifteen homes are now open.

Of the Scovell Road Mission, S.E., Mr. THOS. ARNOLD, hon. sec., writes:—"We are striving to give fifty poor families a dinner in their own homes, also food and firing to other needy cases around us." Address, 9, Princes Square, Kennington Park Road, S.E.

The committee of the Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution point out that the number of destitute and disabled domestics applying for help has largely increased, while the income of the Society has diminished. Secretary, Mr. W. SLY, 33, Sackville Street, Piccadilly, W.

The Benevolent, or Strangers' Friend Society has for the last 116 years systematically visited and relieved the sick poor of all creeds and nationalities. Its practical benevolence proves a blessing to thousands every year. Secretary, Mr. B. H. GERRANS, 121, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

The Maternity Charity and District Nurses Home is helping an increasingly large number of sick poor in the vast and uniformly poor districts of Plaistow, West and East Ham, Canning Town, and the Docks. The organizing secretary is Mr. F. JAMES, Maternity Charity, Howard's Road, Plaistow, E.

The friends at Camberwell Mission and Ragged Schools propose to give a dinner to destitute families, and also to 300 poor children, while cripple children will have a tea and entertainment, and coals and blankets will be given to the aged. Hon. Sec., Mr. ARTHUR H. WARD, 59, Arodene Road, Brixton Hill, S.W.

"We have one of the densest populations in London, and there is a good deal of sickness and distress," writes Rev. J. E. WAKERLEY (19, Lloyd Square, W.C.), of the Wesleyan London Central Mission. Dinners for poor families, and coals for indigent widows, are outstanding features of the winter programme.

"For many years," writes Mr. JOHN W. WESTON, of Grove Mission, Great Guildford Street, S.E., "we have helped to make this a time of joy to those who, through sickness or misfortune, have been reduced almost to starvation point. This year we have a longer list than ever. Our work is carried on by voluntary workers." Address: 19, Southwark Bridge Road, S.E.

For the poor children of Walworth (where the average of population is 200 to the acre, and 237 out of every 1,000 infants born in the locality die before reaching the age of one year) the Sutherland Needy Children's Aid Society appeals for seasonable treats. Address, President, Rev. G. W. KEESEY, 4, Scarsdale Road, Camberwell, S.E.

Pastor PHILIP GAST, 12, Noel Street, Islington, N., has for forty years, at this season more especially, helped the poor of St. Luke's and Clerkenwell. Widows with large families, also families where the husband is prostrate in sickness, and those out of employment in this centre of infidelity and distress, are helped by this work of mercy.

"It has been our joy in the past to cheer our poorer friends by giving them a parcel and some firing," writes Mr. CHAS. A. PAVEY, of the Surrey Square Mission (in association with the Metropolitan Tabernacle). "We hope, with generous aid, to do the same this year." Mr. Pavey's address is 13, Pepler Road, Old Kent Road, S.E.

From the Homes for Motherless Children, Mr. R. T. SMITH appeals "on behalf of children who have no mother." "Gifts for the children's stockings will prove very welcome; but, I would add, we want the stockings as well as the articles to fill them, for many are past mending, and new are required." Address, 90, Thornton Avenue, Chiswick.

Mr. E. H. KERWIN, writing on behalf of Mr. Charrington's work at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E., says: "For nineteen years, through the generosity of the public, we have given to the poor and needy in the back streets and alleys surrounding our great hall, materials for providing a dinner in their own homes. Every case is investigated. All workers give their services gratuitously. Every penny is spent in food. Eight hundred families were helped last year."

Rev. W. CARLILE, hon. chief sec. of the Church Army, appeals on behalf of the prison work of that organization. "Prisoners often receive their discharge on condition that they are taken into our labour homes, and no prisoner is ever refused admission. Many cases are sent to us from police courts, workhouses, and reformatories all over the country. Our relief fund for prisoners' families and discharged prisoners is well nigh exhausted. Address, 130, Edgware Road, W.

Church Notes.

Rev. George W. Keesey, who for many years has been minister of Sutherland Congregational Chapel, Walworth Road, S.E., has accepted the pastorate of Lye Church, Tonbridge.

The anniversary of the Wesleyan Mission at Cardiff was celebrated recently, when Mr. John Cory, J.P., presided over a large audience in Roath Road Church. Rev. A. E. Balch gave interesting accounts of the People's Hall, the Angelina Street Mission, and other undertakings, and said that one of the urgent needs is a shelter for women.

Rev. Archibald Fleming, of the Tron Church, Edinburgh, who has been chosen to succeed Dr. Macleod in St. Columba's Church, London, has done splendid service in his present parish, and has also acquired a wide reputation by his editorship of Life and Work, the monthly magazine of the Church of Scotland.

Bold and aggressive efforts having been commenced to introduce the Sunday sale of certain sporting newspapers in Dursley, Glos., and the surrounding villages, strong resolutions of protest have been carried by the Congregational churches and Sunday schools (Cam and Dursley), and strong appeals have been made to the inhabitants to discountenance this effort to desecrate the day of rest.

In connection with the Baptist Women's Million Shilling Fund, which has been launched in the hope of carrying the Twentieth Century Fund through to completion, Rev. J. H. Shakespeare writes, "I appeal, by the honour of the denomination and by the sacrifices which have already been made, to the ministers and officers of our churches to meet the ladies of their congregations and to confer on what can be done.'

At Whitburn Street, Sunderland, the old Wesleyan chapel, once filled, but for twenty years almost deserted, and now surrounded by slums, has taken a new lease of life. A few faithful souls have stood by the old place; a large body of young people has been gathered; there is a vigorous mission band, and a flourishing Wesley Guild, and the congregation is growing.

It is forty years since Rev. Geo. Sparkes founded the Baptist church at Cowes, where he has laboured ever since with success. Mr. Sparkes' services were recognised lately at a densely crowded public meeting addressed by Revs. A. G. Brown, Vernon J. Charlesworth, and other friends. It is hoped that, despite his years, Mr. Sparkes may yet continue his ministry for some years.

Rev. G. H. Turner has now carried on the King's Cross Mission of the United Methodist Church for fourteen years with most gratifying results. Among the agencies is a cheap food store, which provides for the poorest at the lowest possible rates. The rooms are used at night as a club for working men. All the branches of religious work are vigorously sustained, and on Sunday evenings the Charlotte Street Church has crowded congregations.

The usual service in connection with the Smithfield Cattle Show was held recently at the Agricultural Hall, N. The shepherds and herdsmen assembled in large numbers. A strong choir from St. Mary's Church, assisted by students from the Church Missionary College, helped in the singing. The retiring Vicar of Islington, Dr. Barlow, thus concluded a series of fifteen services of this kind, and took an affectionate farewell of the congregation. The address was based on the words, "Whose I am and whom I serve."

Rev. G. P. McKay has just celebrated the tenth anniversary of his pastorate of Devonshire Square Baptist Church, Stoke Newington, N. On the 15th inst., he preached in the morning, and Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon (Stamford Hill) conducted the evening service. Rev. F. B. Meyer preached on the Monday afternoon, and a public meeting was subsequently held, at which Dr. Clifford gave a stirring speech on "The Conserving Influence of the Christian Church on the Life of the Nation."

The parish church of Roggiett, near the Severn Tunnel, was crowded on a recent occasion, when Archdeacon W. Conybeare Bruce was instituted vicar of Roggiett, with Ifton and Llanvihangel Roggiett. The Bishop of Llandaff gave an address, in which he said that for nearly twenty years the archdeacon had laboured lovingly and faithfully as vicar of St. Wolos, Newport. A noteworthy feature of the service was the presence of three Nonconformist ministers from Newport —a fact which showed the esteem in which the archdeacon is held.

A conference has been held in Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, to consider the forthcoming simultaneous mission to the young. The subject was introduced by Rev. J. E. Roberts. He laid especial stress upon the value of the letter drawn up by Rev. F. B. Meyer, urging ministers throughout the country to join in the mission. Before deciding to do so, however, three things must be clear. They must recognize the possibility and reality of child conversion; there must be a determination to complement the work of the mission by educational classes, and there will have to be a readiness to gather the converts into church membership.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown writes:—"Twelve years ago I was allowed of God to do one of the most blessed bits of work in securing a large block of buildings in Bow Common, notorious for its evil character, and transforming it into the abode of a colony of poor Christian people. For twelve years this good work has been self-supporting; not a halfpenny of debt encumbers it. The London County Council has now demanded that the whole of the drainage be done afresh according to modern sanitary principles. This will involve an approximate outlay of £400. It is impossible for the dear folk at the East London Tabernacle to raise this sum unaided, and they have appealed to me. I have promised to spend the whole of Wednesday, January 1, at the Tabernacle, Burdett Road, E., to receive their offerings, and I venture to ask friends to help me in this effort. Who can estimate the blessing to a poor saint of having three rooms and a wash-house for 2s. per week?"
